Family of dieter given $650,000 in compensation

United Press International

DETROIT — The owners of a suburban Detroit clinic and the manufacturers of a liquid protein have been ordered to pay $650,000 to the family of a man who died while on the controversial liquid protein diet.

Under a settlement approved Friday by Wayne County Circuit Judge Joseph B. Sullivan, the family of Patrick Gaynor will receive a lump sum and lifelong monthly payments as compensation for his 1977 diet-linked death.

The agreement also provides for $107,000 in attorney's fees for Shirley Gaynor, Gaynor's widow, and their two daughters.

Gaynor, 37, of Novi, Mich. and his wife paid the Weight Loss Medical Center in Livonia $270 each in February 1977 to be placed on the controversial liquid-protein diet.

On March 3, Gaynor collapsed in his driveway after complaining of pains in his arms. He was pronounced dead at Botsford General Hospital in Farmington Hills.

Gaynor's death was among 33 under investigation by the Federal Food and Drug Administration and Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The investigations eventually linked several deaths and illnesses to the diet fad begun by the publication of Philadelphia osteopath Robert Linn's best-seller, "The Last Chance Diet."

Studies showed the death rate for people on the diet was 30 times as high as the death rate among the general population.

The Detroit Free Press reported 17 clinics closed in Michigan after the newspaper did an expose on deaths related to liquid protein diets.

Sinatra's old home gets no bids

United Press International

HOBOKEN, N.J. — There were no bids for Frank Sinatra's boyhood home Saturday, but there was a strong glow of nostalgia.

The narrow, four-story brownstone rowhouse was filled with the sound of Sinatra records and candles were lighted on a cake to celebrate the 66th birthday of "Old Blue Eyes," who launched his career from this small city on the Hudson River.

A crowd of reporters, real estate agents and the curious came to house for a 2 p.m. auction but no one placed a bid for $150,000, the minimum Edwin and Evelyn Olivieri, its current owners, would accept.

Olivieri, who bought the house for $19,000 10 years ago and hoped to cash in on the name of the entertainer, insisted he was not disappointed.

"In my mind, I didn't believe it would happen, but I took the chance," he said.

The only interested buyers seemed a bit unusual, Olivieri said.

Last Sunday, he said a woman had photographed the house extensively for someone she called an "eccentric millionaire" from California, then disappeared.

Karen McDonnel of Mineola, N.Y., sent a check for $300 and a note saying, "Frank Sinatra's house is worth $1 million to me but I only have $300."

She asked the Olivieris to sell her their home so she could turn it over to Sinatra for his birthday, Olivieri said, adding he had to turn the offer down.

The house with a 10-foot wide strip of grass out back goes on the open market Monday at $150,000, said Donald Gordon, the real estate agent who organized the auction.

Without the Sinatra tag, the eight-room house would sell for $90,000 to $100,000, he said.

Gordon said the residential street is on one of the three most desirable in the city, which is undergoing a renaissance as young professionals buy century-old brownstones they could not afford elsewhere.

Unlike most homeowners who might display a remodeled bathroom or kitchen, the Olivieris spent the day pointing out what had not changed.

An ironing board that swung out from the wall was billed as the one Sinatra's mother used. A front second-story bedroom, now altered to suit 6- and 7-year-old brothers, was shown as the room where young Frank slept.
