proposal will be presented in December.

"We will request the allocation of land, then start hunting for the money," Adair said. "We estimate it to cost about $10 million."

Adair said she will try to find the funding through several different sources.

"We will look for it through University funding, a student fee, or gift money," she said.

Adair said Fish Camp is the only program the center won't be able to facilitate because of the large number of campers who attend. However, she s she would like to see T-C held at the facility.

"It's a three hour drive t Camp, and the major expens transportation," she said. "cuts down on the wear, tear time of students."

Adair also plans to invit ternational students to use center.
