We are now taking the school census for the school year 1942-43 and would like for all patrons who have not sent a census blank to the school to please call the Superintendent's office, or get in contact with one of the teachers of the school so we can see that you get a census blank. We especially urge all parents who have no children in school but whose child will become six years old before September 1st, 1942, to report at the Superintendent's office as the child might be placed on the census roll for the next year. Some students have graduated and are in college but will still be under 18 years of age on September 1, 1942. These people are eligible for the census roll and each member of the census roll means $22.50 for our finances.

When war was declared A. & M. had an officer-bank of 5,200 men awaiting call who had received reserve commissions through Reserve Officers Training Corps contracts. It is estimated that 3,500 of these are on active duty at present.

Naval aviation has called many students from A. & M. during the past year, although no definite figures are available as to numbers.

Lieutenant C. F. Currier was assigned as officer in charge, and was on hand to receive the first contingent of seamen when they arrived Tuesday, March 31. To them he said:

"You are now members of the student body of the Texas A. & M. College, which has been producing army officers for 66 years. This school produced more officers in the first World War than West Point and V.M.I. combined. They are graduating 536 officers in a few weeks.

"You are wearing the first naval uniforms ever to be seen on this campus. I want you to make A. & M. as proud of its naval unit as it is of its army."

cided to make non-military students and those not making a "B" in military science ineligible for membership. The number of members at the present time has been limited to one hundred and fifty. As stated before, membership in the company was limited to Juniors and Seniors, but an exception to this custom had to be made in 1918 on account of the small number of Juniors and Seniors enrolled. Several freshmen and sophomores were enrolled as members.

The first uniform for the company was of white with gold ornaments. The headgear was a tin helmet which has long since been discarded in favor of the lighter white military caps. For the most part the uniform has always been of white.
