Dance, Duke, Parade Make Busy Saturday For Cadets

BY GEORGE CHARLTON

It began with crackling music reverberating through the loudspeakers in the shell of the new bandstand, and the Kadetts were soon in full stride. The bandstand was built by local artists, and the Kadetts added a little bit of showmanship to the occasion. The Kadetts' performance was a fitting introduction to the activities of the day, which included a parade, concert, and dance in the Sbisa Mess Hall. And he was far from wrong. There had not been a more impressive gathering for this, A&M's greatest social event of the year militarily, an impressive confluence of students, faculty, and military personnel.

Several thousand students and other visitors filled the Sbisa Mess Hall on Saturday afternoon. The parade, which was held in honor of the Fourth Army, featured a group of student instructors, including instructors and dates, as well as an impressive number of cadets. The parade was led by Maj. Gen. A. R. Crawford, Chancellor Gibb Gilchrist, Maj. Gen. D. W. Old, President F. C. Dolton, and Maj. Gen. K. L. Berry. The inspection team, which was composed of the Fourth Army, inspected the facilities for ROTC in the Military District in Austin.

The inspection team's inspection was performed in a formal manner, with the students, faculty, and military personnel present. The inspection was a success, and the students were pleased with the results. The inspection team's report was positive, and the students were confident that the facilities would be improved and that the ROTC program would be strengthened.
