Happening vs. Caused

Nobody likes to have accidents happen, either to themselves or to anyone else.

And everybody is quick to speak up when they see something that could cause an accident, like an open manhole or a frayed electric wire.

But they just won't speak up in the right place.

The college's Accident Prevention committee has arranged a reporting system that would allow everyone to report accident hazards with a minimum of trouble.

Because of department safety advisors and cadet officers and members of the accident committee, someone who has reporting forms and knows how to use them is within the reach of everyone, student and faculty.

After these reports are turned in to the accident committee, they are compiled and turned over to the proper college department for correction of the hazard.

The head of the accident committee said at its meeting this week that correction of the hazards was always prompt, "if we know about them. We have to have the reports."

The report is a simple thing, yet it could save someone a bad accident some day.

News of the World

By The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—The long-suppressed Yalta papers were released last night by the State department. The Yalta meeting was held in February, 1945, bringing together Joseph Stalin, British Prime Minister Churchill and then-President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Among disclosures of the papers was that Stalin told Roosevelt that sweeping concessions in the Far East were needed by him in order to explain to the Soviet people why Russia had entered the war against Japan. It was at Yalta that Russia agreed to enter the war against Japan.

LONDON—The British government expressed its view last night that making public the Yalta papers is undesirable. A foreign office spokesman gave that view after the documents were released by the State department.

LONDON—The British leftwing laborite leader, Aneurin Bevan, was kicked out of the Labor party ranks in Parliament. He is still a laborite outside of Parliament, but a party move is under way to deprive him of that status, too. He had challenged the moderate Labor party leadership of Clement Atlee.

Recreation Group Plans Volleyball

The College Station Recreation council has reactivated its men's volleyball league.

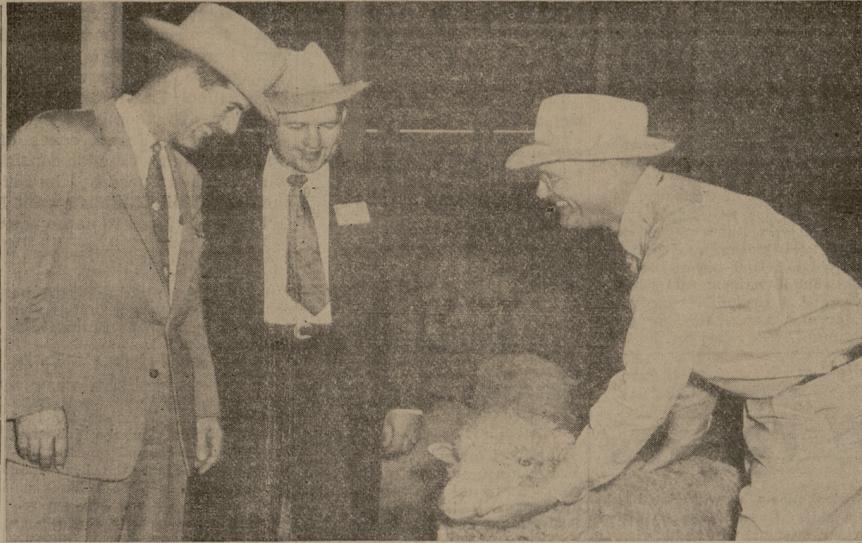

Plans call for at least eight teams to meet once a week at A&M Consolidated high school to compete for the city championship.

Anyone interested in forming a team or joining one may contact J. F. Miller at 6-6484 or 6-1363.

Lecture Planned

Dr. Pierre Grabar, chief immunological division, Pasteur institute, Paris, France, will discuss "The Use of Immuno-chemical Methods in Protein Studies" in the biological sciences lecture room at 8 p.m. Friday. The public is invited, said Dean Ide P. Trotter of the Graduate School.

Most of the world's inhabitants live below the 600-foot level.

NOT INTERESTED—This sheep doesn't seem the least bit interested in the fact that these men are admiring his superior qualities. This type of sheep is supposed to thrive better because it has less wool around its eyes, thereby improving his eyesight. Looking him over are, left to right, Ernest Williams, executive secretary of the Texas Sheep and Goat association, R. W. Hodges, president, and Dr. Tom Watkins, sheep and goat specialist in the animal husbandry department.

At Polgar Show

Hypnotic Spell Described

By WELTON JONES

Have you ever wondered what it's like to be hypnotized?

I know, because it happened to me recently in Guion hall during the Polgar show titled "Miracles of the Mind."

This Polgar had announced he would perform such feats as meeting 50 people and remembering their names, finding objects hidden about the auditorium—and hypnotism.

I confess I was a confirmed skeptic about hypnotism since once before I had volunteered to be hypnotized and the man got nowhere with me. Therefore, when Polgar called for volunteers from the audience, I merely sat and watched the others offer to become assistants. Finally, he explained a simple test to reveal whether one might be a good subject and I saw no harm in trying.

After we were on the stage, Polgar told us to clasp our hands, relax and try to picture a peaceful summer scene. As I watched the short, graying, rather plump and normal looking man, it was hard to believe he could, at will, make me follow his every command. But he could.

He handed us small cards which told us to gaze at two dots covered with semi-circles. He said to pretend they were his eyes and we would become very sleepy, dropping the cards as we dozed off.

With his voice in the background and the fascination of the two periods, it seemed the most natural thing to go to sleep.

Events of the next two hours seem like a mixed-up dream now. With the help of friends, I can recall several thoughts that flashed through my mind and some of the actions I performed during this time.

I recall Polgar handing me some eyeglasses and telling me that some electronic discovery would enable me to see through all cloth with them. I put them on and the audience seemed completely devoid of clothing. I could detect some faint color but no clothes.

Needless to say, I was quite astonished, but Polgar approached and shook my hand and once more I was asleep. And so it went.

At one time I was watching a movie with Charlie Chaplin and then in an airplane looking down. These things were completely real to me and I was not at all astonished at the rapid changes.

When Polgar finally awakened us, I wondered what had become of the time but when I started to rise from my chair to shake his hand, I was attached to the chair. Try as I might, I couldn't get up until he clapped his hands and we were all free.

Then as we prepared to leave the stage, someone remembered it was Polgar's birthday, so we gathered around the microphone and sang a chorus of "Happy Birthday." No one could explain where we learned about the birthday—we just knew.

After returning to my room, I took down my math book and did more constructive studying in one hour than I usually do in three. This was a result of one of his commands, I am told.

The whole experience was something like falling asleep and dream-
