Too Many Teeth

The Academic Council has now passed an official college regulation prohibiting the wearing of letters from other schools on the A&M campus.

The thought behind this is laudable—of course letters from other schools shouldn't be worn by A&M students, but a college regulation is not the way to persuade students not to wear them.

The group that proposed the regulation said it would "put teeth" in their request not to wear them. Some teeth—although no specific punishment was included in the regulation, it is within the bounds of possibility that a student could be suspended for wearing a letter too many times.

What happened to appealing personally to the slim minority who persist in wearing the letters, on the basis of the Aggie spirit, tradition, or just plain common courtesy?

CCTA Endorses Insurance Plan For Teachers

The policy committee of the College Classroom Teachers association has unanimously endorsed old age and survivors' insurance coverage for teachers in state colleges.

At a meeting attended recently by C. H. Bernard and Melvin S. Brooks, president and vice-president of the A&M CCTA chapter, the committee endorsed the plan because "it is becoming increasingly apparent that colleges which are not included in the plan will be at a serious disadvantage, compared with those which are, in recruiting good quality personnel."

The policy committee, which is the governing body of the state CCTA organization, also decided "large increases in appropriations for salaries of college employees are necessary in order to narrow the gap between Texas colleges and colleges and universities which are nationally recognized as top flight in quality."

Plans were made to encourage favorable legislative action on these proposals and on the recommendations of the Texas Commission on Higher Education.

New Radio Series To Begin Soon

A three-months series of radio programs on human relations in industry, based on work by the Texas Engineering Extension service, will begin this month on 19 Texas radio stations.

The 15-minute weekly programs cover management problems, through employee evaluation, discipline, training of workers, efficient-executive practices, employee-management communications to fields of safety practices and settlement of grievances.

Radio station WTAW will carry the series beginning March 27. The shows were produced, dramatized and recorded by the staff of WTAW.

Although the proportion of widows to the total population of the United States is declining, the number of widows was 7,400,000 in 1953 compared to 5,700,000 in 1940.
