'Mr. Toughy'

A&M Graduate Featured In Saturday Evening Post

An A&M graduate who has earned the title "the toughest general in the air force" is featured in this week's Saturday Evening Post. The man is Brig. Gen. William (Jerry) Lee, '27, now commander of the 13th air force.

The author of the article, Robert Sherrod, paints Lee as a hell-for-leather, rambunctious general in the Patton and Forrest tradition. Lee's career has included such varied incidents as teaching President Eisenhower to fly, slapping a United States representative, and waging a one-man war against "domineering women."

As Lee tells it in the article, he was not a very straight-laced lad while in school here either: "I spent the last two years on probation, because I got liquored up at my cousin's wedding. I was the only one the night sergeant caught. They let me stay in school on the condition I'd sign a letter of resignation they could keep handy. Another time I thought President Bizzell was going to kick me out for milking a cow." Milking a cow?

"Yeah, a trainload of us had pulled up on a siding near Waco. A cow was tied up near the tracks, and I could see she needed milking. So I went over and milked her. I didn't see anything wrong in that. Dr. Bizzell said 'It's the way you did it—out there in front of all those people.'"

Lee was 24 when he graduated from A&M, and besides the exploits he tells about in the magazine article, he had been a first lieutenant on the artillery staff, a member of the fish football team, a distinguished student, president of the Saddle and Sirloin club, vice-president of the Masonic club, business manager of the rodeo, and secretary-treasurer of the junior class. His home was Weatherford.

He is the only bachelor of science in animal husbandry who is a general in either the army or the air force, and he also has the right to call himself a "doctor." A&M awarded him the honorary LL.D. degree in 1946.

Lee taught Eisenhower to fly in 1937, when Lee was instructing the Philippine air force, a job which earned him the title "the father of the Philippine air force."

The slapping incident occurred in Italy. Lee slapped John Maragon, a representative of President Truman who was later indicted in the "5 per center" investigations.

It was a street incident, and Lee did not know the man was an official representative. Lee was demoted to colonel as a result of the incident, but was later re-named a brigadier general.

And the war against women? As he says, "The domineering American female is a he-wife who wears the britches in the family."
