New President Named In Brazilian Revolt

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — Anti-Communist rebels seeking to oust leftist President Joao Goulart had Paschoal Ranieri Mazzilli, president of the Chamber of Deputies, sworn in as Brazil's new president today.

Auro Moura Andrade, president of the Brazilian Senate, declared the presidency vacant after a two-day military and political revolt against Goulart. Moura Andrade asked Mazzilli to assume the office as Goulart's constitutional successor.

Mazzilli, next in line because Brazil has no vice president, took the oath of office in a brief ceremony at 3:30 a.m. in Brasilia, the inland capital.

Goulart's steady drift to the left had aroused staunch conservative, anti-communist and Roman Catholic opposition. The tensions came to a climax last week with a 40-hour mutiny by 1,425 sailors against conservative control of the navy.

On Monday, a U. S. State Department official in Washington said the situation in Brazil has "steadily deteriorated" and expressed concern over increasing Communist influence in the largest and potentially richest country in Latin America.

Mazzilli, 53, is the son of Italian immigrants and a lawyer of conservative political inclinations. He has been acting president four times in the past, three times in the absence of Goulart or President Janio Quadros from the country, and when Quadros resigned in 1961 while Goulart, then vice president, was on a trip to Communist China.

Reynolds' Rap

by Mike Reynolds

President Joao Goulart of Brazil resigned his post Wednesday night in the wake of an army led revolt in eight of the country's 22 states. Troops of the rebellious second army marched from Sao Paulo to Rio de Janeiro to take over the government.

What appears to lie ahead in the storm-tossed country in South America? Twice before in Brazil's history, dissatisfied Army officials have seized control of the country only to relinquish it to civilian hands once the strife had cleared. There is little reason to suspect any other course of events this time around either.

It is too early to predict any kind of coloring in the future Brazilian government but the general public is so conscious of the need for reform that any government under the hands of the people would have to be dedicated to change, and any change except to a full communist state, couldn't be worse than the Goulart government.

The United States has never been too happy with the Goulart government because if it's unwritten policy of ignoring inflationary policies that went a long way towards canceling any of the effects of this country's foreign aid.

The foreign aid certainly could have been used in the northeast corner of the country where the average income per person is $90 a year. The communists have long been seeking to establish a foothold in this section.

Although the communists have not won in their fight some of the leaders in the "hungry corner" of the country, have definite leftist leanings.

Strangely enough, it is not this section of the country or the communists that have started the revolt. It is, on the contrary, anti-communists forces out of the south.

The main reason listed by the rebel army for their revolt, was Goulart's coddling of a group of leftist marines and sailors who had barricaded themselves in a communist labor office and repeatedly defied military authorities. Goulart turned them all loose.

The dethroned president of the largest country in South America has constantly leaned toward leftist policies during his occupation of the office and constantly sought to have the Communist party legalized. Throughout his term he drew staunch, conservative anti-communist and Roman Catholic opposition.

If one can believe all of the reports filtering out of Brazil in the first hours after the revolution, it appears that the Communist conspiracy in the Western Hemisphere has suffered a major blow. It might be best to take everything with a grain of salt, though.

Sound Off

Editor, The Battalion:

To the finest single group of men anywhere, the Class of '66, I would like to make this final appeal for votes. I consider the greatest honor at Aggieland to be the holding of a position which was decided on by the class — your Aggie buddies. The particular position I am seeking, Yell Leader, has always been one of great respect and responsibility. A man must love and be proud of his school to want this especially tough Aggie job, I do, Classmates. Many of you know me and know that being a good Ag is an item of personal pride to me. If you decide you want fightin' Joe Bush for Yell Leader, I'll be not only the happiest, but also the hardest working Ag on campus. Class of '66, I am counting on you. Go vote Thursday. ## 'BIG NEWS FOR CANDIDATES'

Houston Federal Court Rules Delay Redistricting Until '65

By The Associated Press
 The Houston federal court ruling on redistricting was the big news Wednesday among Texas political candidates.

Congressional candidates were the only ones that would have been directly affected by immediate enforcement of a court order for congress-at-large races until the state is redistricted.

Candidates for other races, particularly for state house and senate, feared that an order for immediate enforcement would result in a special legislative session just before the May 2 primary.

The Houston court, in effect, allowed the state to wait until the 1965 Legislature before reshuffling congressional districts.

U. S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough, D-Tex., opened his Dallas headquarters with two brothers, H. J. and Donald Yarborough, both Dallas attorneys, helping.

Robert Morris, Republican Candidate for U. S. Senate, said in a speech prepared for a Fort Worth audience "It is folly for young American men to be dying in Viet Nam when Free China President Chiang Kai-Shek can retake the Chinese mainland and solve virtually all of our problems in the Far East."

Morris said, if elected senator, he would urge that Chiang Kai-Shek be allowed "to return to his rightful place on his homeland."

In another vein, Morris told the Fort Worth club he would support a tax credit for parents with sons or daughters in college but would oppose federal aid to either public or private schools.

He said a tax credit is not the same as a tax deduction.

"A tax credit is subtracted from the final income tax total a person must pay the government," Morris said.

Gordon McLendon, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senate, said he is amazed by Ralph Yarborough's efforts to link the McLendon campaign with former Governor Allan Shivers. "I am certainly not ashamed of my friendship with Allan Shivers, but this is strictly my own campaign," McLendon said in remarks prepared for a Beaumont rally.

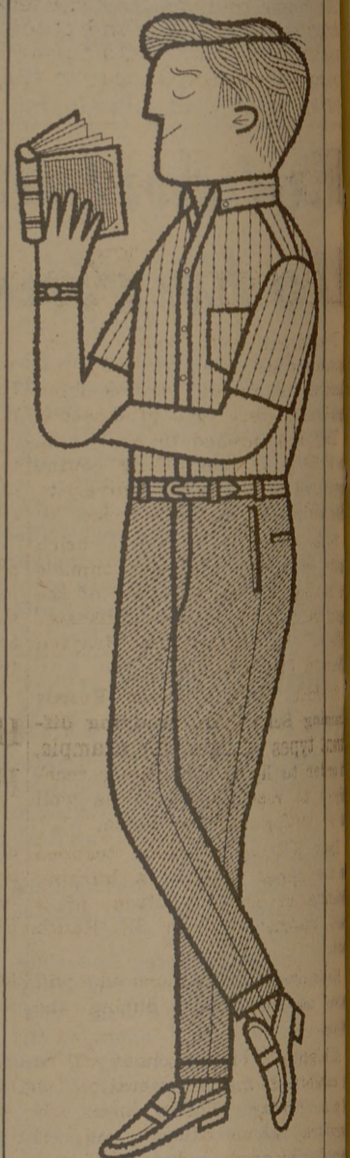

"It seems to me that the dragging of Shivers' name into the campaign would be highly embarrassing to Yarborough. The fact that Shivers beat him soundly in two races for governor showed the two men's comparative standing with Texas voters."

George Bush, Republican candidate for the Senate, visited Midland and called for a "more meaningful" oil import program. He said he would favor putting Canadian import under the same sort of quota restrictions now reserved for other countries.
