Techsans Want To Be Texans

'67, Year of the . . . Name Change?

The idea of changing the name of College Station is new history, but there is another movement out in West Texas for another name change.

Students, faculty members and ex-students of Texas Tech at Lubbock have launched what they hope will be a successful campaign to change the name of that college to Texas State University.

According to the Tech student newspaper, "The University Daily," a name-change committee has given support to a proposed opinion survey which would be carried out by the Tech board of directors.

"The survey plan," says the paper, "originated by Student Association President Max Blakney and proposed by the Association, would provide a basis for action by the Board's Name-Change Committee."

In a separate move, the paper continues, the committee kicked off a "Texas State in '68" campaign in an effort to "obtain agreement on the name change before the 1968 special session of the state legislature.

The committee, which claims to represent a majority of Tech students and faculty and some 6,000 members of the Ex-Students Association, supports the name Texas State University. According to the "Daily," the name received a majority of votes from both students and faculty in polls taken from both students and faculty in polls taken this past spring and in the 1964-65 school year.

The "Texas State in '68" campaign will be carried out by the committee in cooperation with the Tech faculty, student and ex-student groups.

The paper states that the purpose of the campaign will be to convince the ex-student association that the name-change issue must be faced. Only when they are so convinced are they likely to accept the survey proposal."

With the College Station name change now dead, maybe those industrious persons who took their time to contribute a new name proposal for our own CS would like to continue their service by helping out these Tech students with their name change.

Possibly with a little outside backing their measure will succeed. Besides, it would give the Aggies a chance to put another t.u. on their football schedule. t.s.u. that is.

A&M Staff Aid Vocational Workshop

The four-man teacher-training staff of Texas A&M's Engineering Extension Service will assist in a vocational industrial teachers state workshop next week in Austin.

Basil M. Hackney said more than 400 teachers will join in evaluations of shop, curriculum and library organization of vocational programs in public schools.

A&M delegates in addition to Hackney include Louis R. Maoney, Dewey Cowling Jr. and Eugene C. Fisher.

Foreign Student Enrollment Drops To 334

A drop in second semester foreign student enrollment at Texas A&M was noted by foreign student advisor Bob Melcher.

Second term enrollment is 334, down 76 from the initial semester. First semester registration of international students totaled 410 from 54 countries. Forty-seven countries are represented this term.

University enrollment is 4,378. Melcher said 397 foreign students enrolled for the second summer term in 1966.

India continues to lead with 46 students, two fewer than last semester. Pakistan has 38, off eight from last term. Other leaders include the Dominican Republic with 31, China, 26, Mexico, 22, Tunisia, 18, and the United Arab Republic, 16.

Comprising the major part of the enrollment are 219 graduate students. Freshmen rank next with 33, while sophomore, junior and senior classes report 23 each. Thirteen persons are listed as special students. The semester ends August 25.

think of the value of ROTC training. The graduates of A&M have distinguished themselves in battle wherever forces of the United States have fought. They'll continue to do so in the future.

Finally, fish Jones, you will experience the feeling of knowing you've done something that takes some guts.

When you march-in at a football game, go to yell practice, pass in review, go to silver taps ceremonies, and, finally, when you march in your first final review, you'll know that the whole thing was worth it, in spite of all the trouble upperclassmen gave you.

You may not believe it, but they're behind you all the way and hoping you'll make it. They've been through it, too—sophomores, juniors, and seniors.

Good luck, fish Jones. Welcome to Aggieland.

City and county government officials will attend a Civil Defense management class at Texas A&M Aug. 7-11, announced by Willis R. Bodine, CD chief instructor for the Engineering Extension.

Among 21 registrants for the course are CD directors and assistant directors, two mayors, a sheriff, three city managers and other city and county officials.

Classes instructed by Bodine, Clark Titus and William C. T. ball will be held in the Memorial Student Center Social Room.

"Purpose of the course is to give local directors a broad understanding of total activities involved in civil defense operations," Dr. Bodine said.

"Local officials have responsibility in the event of an emergency. They should know how to acquire state and federal assistance that is available," he added.
