

ETV Role Extends To Sports Coverage

By SCOTT HERVEY
Battalion Special Writer

Hundreds of Aggies as well as local residents and Baylor fans learned Tuesday night that the Educational Television Program at A&M turns out more than taped lectures for the English Department.

Basketball fans that drifted to Guion Hall felt the gates of G. Rollie White Coliseum closed to all but reserved seat ticket holders were furnished with a view of the game, thanks to the ETV system. Three television cameras, placed in key locations in the Coliseum, never missed a key play.

According to Educational Television Director Mel Chastain, the technical end of the production went smoothly.

Chastain attributed the success of the overflow telecast to the "outstanding efforts of the ETV engineering department which made possible network quality coverage with only 18 hours notice."

TEN MEN handled the production for ETV. Chastain directed while Richard McGaughey, Norman Godwin, and Bill Digner worked cameras. The engineering problems were handled by ETV Chief Engineer George Shearer and Bill Freiberger, while Steve Orthwein coordinated video tape control in Coach Metcalf's office.

The play-by-play was furnished by Mike Mistovich with the Aggie Basketball Network. ETV technician Jack McCarty co-ordinated the audio portion.

When ETV was asked to televise the game by the athletic department, the technicians were in a taping session at the Plan Sciences Building. When the session ended late Monday afternoon, they broke down their equipment and moved to the Coliseum.

AFTER SETTING up, they ran equipment checks into the night. Monday morning they continued their equipment checks and received final instructions shortly before the game.

When asked whether or not ETV would consider televising any more basketball games, Chastain said that things went so well Tuesday night he "could see no reason why we wouldn't do it."

According to Chastain, all it would take to televise another basketball game, or even a football game, would be a request from the athletic department.

Sports production plays only a small part in ETV's role at A&M. Seven departments regularly request production of taped lectures and guest speakers.

Complete control facilities are located in a remote truck that can be moved anywhere on or off campus. Chastain explained this eases taping lectures involving the use of heavy equipment. According to the Texas Education Association, A&M has the best equipped university owned television remote unit in the state.

ETV also produces other educational programs not directly related to the university. Last year one of their documentaries won an award as one of the best television programs of the year.

Fish Ball

"The New Breed Soul' from Victoria will play at the dance," he added.

The barbecue Saturday will be at Hensel Park from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

"If it rains, we have permission to move under Kyle Field to prevent the barbecue from being cancelled," Brown said.

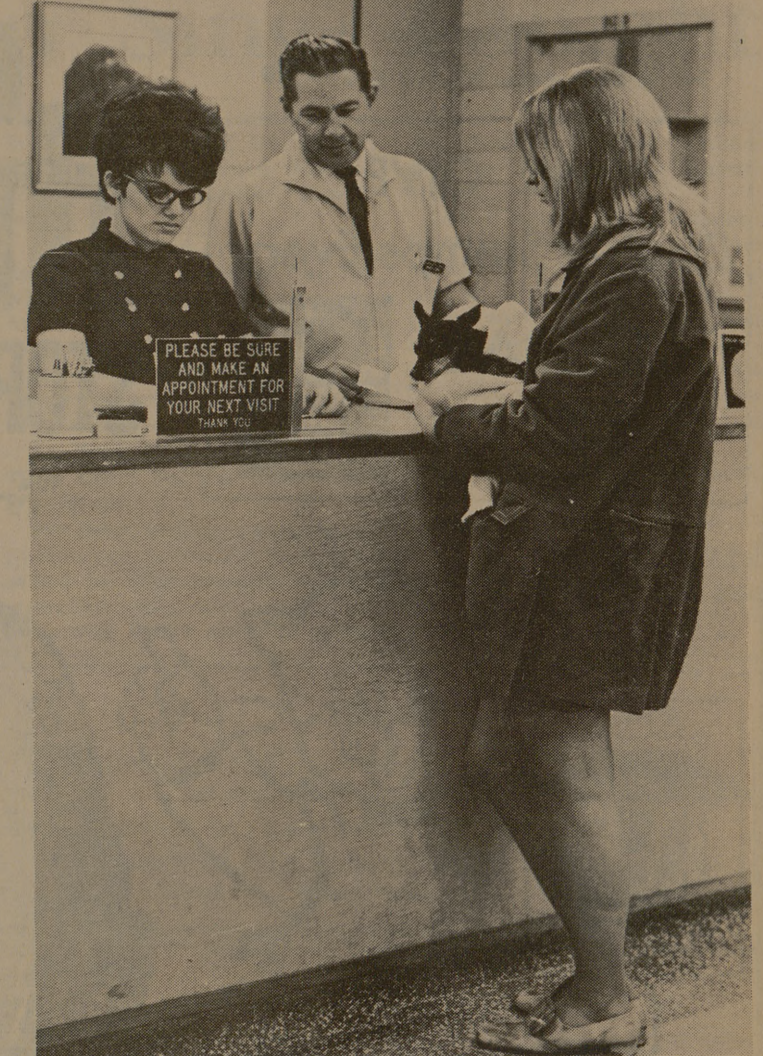

After the barbecue the judges will meet the finalists in an informal reception in the Memorial Student Center.

CONCLUDING the week-end, the Fish Ball in Duncan Dining Hall starts at 8 and lasts until 12, featuring the "Fun and Games Commission" from Houston. Dress is class A with white shirt and bow tie for cadets and suit and tie for civilians. Girls may wear either semi-formals or formals.

"Tickets are $7 for everything during the Fish Weekend," Brown said. "No split tickets will be sold."

Tickets can be purchased in the Student Program office, at each event, or from any freshman officer.

Students may park their cars behind Duncan Dining Hall, for the Ball, Brown added.

Board Ruling

tember and October and asked him why he had waited so long to air his complaints.

Rowton said that he had a class at the time of the first meeting and that he asked Mrs. Cecelia Prihoda, secretary of student publications, to notify him of the second meeting. Mrs. Prihoda later said she had told Rowton that the second meeting had been cancelled.

Lindsey then pointed out that Rowton had waited until about ten minutes before Wednesday's meeting to tell him he wanted to appear before the board.

"I wanted to make sure that the other board members weren't briefed about the situation beforehand," Rowton said.

"The board members have not been told anything about your appearance," Lindsey said.

ROWTON then reiterated his purpose for appearing before the board.

"What I want the board to consider is the retroactive ruling and no period of adjustment," Rowton concluded.

Rowton then left the meeting and the board further discussed the matter.

Dr. Clark, the newest member of the board, asked for a clarification of the ruling and said it seemed to him that the rule actually told Battalion staffers to "move up or be excluded."

"I think it is vague and needs to be rewritten," White commented.

"With all due respect to Rowton, I think the ruling has worked out well," Dr. Bowers said.

"SOME of the staffs think they can decide who will be editor among themselves," White said.

That's been the history of The Battalion," added Lindsey.

Dr. Bowers explained that the ruling was designed not to exclude certain persons from top editorial positions, but rather to encourage participation by a greater number of students.

"Perhaps we should have the best man available even if he serves five years and into graduate school. He should present a good image of A&M," White commented.

"It's easier to let a man be editor for three years, but that's not the purpose of the learning process," Lindsey said.

IT WAS pointed out that if people in key positions are not allowed to work at other top positions the next year, the quality of The Battalion might suffer because of inexperience of new staffers.

Dr. Bowers said that many outstanding students from junior colleges come to A&M and could help fill the gap.

"I have to put myself in the Aggies' shoes and ask why a person transferring in should be higher than someone on the staff for two years. There's seniority in everything else; why not in The Battalion?" White suggested.

"I think perhaps there should be a combination of seniority and ability," Dr. Bowers answered.

He pointed out that Rowton already has a preferred position when he graduates because he served as Battalion editor his junior year.

"I DON'T think that was Rowton's point (for appearing before the board)," White said.

Lindsey further defended the ruling.

"I think it is useful in fulfilling the obligation of the university to educate as many people as possible," he said.

"Isn't one of the intentions to give the editor the freedom to appoint his own staff?" Dr. Clark asked.

"I keep thinking of the purpose of the university; to help these students learn," Lindsey answered.

Lindsey said that before the ruling was adopted the top positions on the Battalion were controlled by a small group of students.

"Not only was a small group perpetuating themselves; they were discouraging other people," he added.

Lindsey emphasized that editors of student publications are always welcome to appear at meetings of the board.
