Correction Burn Good;
Apollo 13 Won't Miss

Houston — Back on course toward success, Apollo program controllers and astronauts aboard the spacecraft on the homeward journey.

James A. Lovell Jr., Fred W. Haise and John L. Swigert continued to monitor the vital systems of the crew and the spacecraft for a total of 2 days and over 11 hours.

When the crew entered the final hours of the abortive journey, the probe was readied to enter the atmosphere and make a smooth landing.

Barring a major problem, the crew will make it home before Monday.

Before re-entering the atmosphere the astronauts must turn on two sections of their space suits — power sources necessary for their return.

When the crew entered the final hours of the abortive journey, the probe was readied to enter the atmosphere and make a smooth landing.

A tentative plan calls for Lovell, Haise and Swigert to enter the command module and power on its systems about 7:30 a.m. EST Monday. They would then begin the final hours of the abortive journey.

The probe would then start to turn on the three-fuel tanking between the lander and command module and be ready to land on the ocean once the mission is completed.

After the landing of the probe, the astronauts will have to perform a series of tasks before they can be transported to the hospital for medical examination.

If all goes well, the astronauts will be transported to the recovery ship "Challenger" and then to a waiting aircraft.

In the event of a successful re-entry, the astronauts will then be transported to the hospital for medical examination.

Senator approves statement

The Senate Student Senate approved a new statement on student rights and responsibilities at the university.

The statement was approved by a vote of 50-40, with 10 abstentions. The statement, which had been under discussion for several weeks, was approved by a vote of 50-40, with 10 abstentions.

Senator Halpert, who introduced the statement, said it was approved by the Senate as a result of student requests for greater protection of their rights.
