Student Radio KANM staff to meet tonight

Students interested in working with student radio KANM-FM should attend a staff meeting tonight at 7:30 in the Student Programs Office, MSC 216.

Students do not need licenses, and no experience is required to work with the student-run FM station. Experienced station staff and those who signed up to work last semester also are urged to attend.

Associated Press WASHINGTON — Officials at all levels of government are citing the new federal Privacy Act as requiring them to close off access to records formerly open to the public. And in most cases they are wrong, say offi-cials responsible for administering the act.

"Privacy is getting a bad name in some circles, simply because it is being confused with secrecy," David Linowes, chairman of the Privacy Protection Study Commission, said in a recent speech.

Linowes referred to a controversy over "press access to information in the hands of government officials and new constraints on that access imposed by officials who have either misinterpreted or failed to understand what the Privacy Act require-

The commission chairman cited these examples of misinterpretations:

"In some cities, police depart-ments no longer let reporters read the police blotter; in some states, local officials are denied essential Social Security information needed to determine welfare payments. In Washington, D.C., a government hospital refused to release details on official, citing the Privacy Act as the reason. In Idaho, state employment tion, which the Privacy Act says must remain confidential? officials refuse to give out Social Se curity numbers to state accountants

to close open records

Officials cite Privacy Act MEE

Going over the agency's books." Linowes emphasized that the act "does not deny the press access to information it had before enactment of this legislation." He added that the problem "lies not in the act itself but in the way some have chosen to interpret it.

Some critics of the Privacy Act dis-agree with that last statement by Linowes. They blame Congress for doing a poor job of defining just what the act was supposed to do. "On the whole, the Privacy Act is not a well-drafted piece of legislation," wrote one government attor-ney at the conclusion of a 40-page analysis of the act. "There are many ambiguities, internal inconsistencies and instances where the full effects o its provisions were not appreciated by its drafters.

The Privacy Act is one of two fed-eral laws under which individuals can demand access to any records government agencies maintain about them. The other is the Freedom of Information Act.

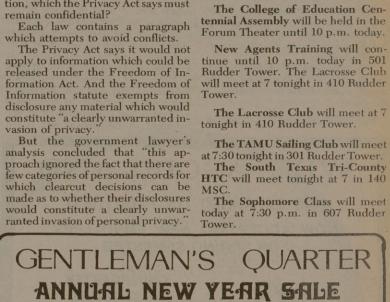

Are there cases where the two laws conflict? Where the Freedom of Information Act requires a govern ment agency to surrender informa remain confidential?

Each law contains a paragraph which attempts to avoid conflicts

The Privacy Act says it would not apply to information which could be released under the Freedom of Information Act. And the Freedom of Information statute exempts from disclosure any material which would constitute "a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy.
