Historian proclaims crisis, points to cowhide benches

Architecture is in the most profound crisis of its history, a visiting architectural historian and Centennial Professor said yesterday. "American architecture is remarkably uniform—of distinct character, yet homogenized in form," James Marston Fitch told students and faculty in the Architecture Building's auditorium. The director of architectural history and preservation at Columbia University, Fitch has written several books and is technical editor of Architectural Forum. He attributed the architectural crisis to technology and the "lunatic exploitation of vacant land." "These technological forces once signaled the beginning of a new hopeful era in architecture; now they hail the end of one," Fitch said. "Wherever you go, architects are making exactly the same errors throughout the accumulated experiences of the last 10,000 years of design," Fitch said. "The interiors of skyscrapers today, however, aren't much different than those built in 1910."

He said the John Hancock Building in Boston demonstrates the "utmost limits that this (technocracy) can be taken." Most of the windows in the 60-story building blew out during construction and have been replaced several times at the cost of million dollars. The owners have also had to purchase several surrounding buildings that were damaged by flying panes of glass. "They figured the cost of buying the buildings was cheaper than any possible lawsuits," Fitch said. The historian pointed to the lamps and chandeliers in the Memorial Student Center lounge as an "outrageous misuse of human talent and energy—the worst I've ever seen anywhere."

He also called the MSC's cowhide benches vulgar and typical of the center's "warehouse design."

Fitch also criticized the new Dallas-Ft. Worth Regional Airport as a misuse of human talent and energy. "These two projects symbolize our present plight," Fitch said. "If we would pay more attention to the built environment you'd see fewer such chandeliers and sterile airports."

Book sale scheduled

The Friends of the Texas A&M University Library are sponsoring a book sale to be held April 7, outside the TAMU Library. Donations of books, magazines, maps, sheet music, and posters may be deposited in boxes provided at McDonald's, area food stores, the Library, and campus dorms. Anyone dropping donations at McDonald's will receive a free coke. Proceeds from the sale will be used to purchase art prints that will circulate from the library. Large donations may be picked up by calling Tamara Frost (845-6631) or Connie Bihon (845-1452) at the University Library.

Fluorides topic of speech

COLLEGE STATION — Dr. Kenneth S. Pitzer of the Department of Chemistry at the University of California at Berkeley will lecture at Texas A&M University Tuesday (March 30). He will appear as a participant in the Visiting Centennial Professor program speaking on "Peculiarities of Xenon and Radon Fluorides" at 4 p.m. in room 226 of the library. Prof. Pitzer is an outstanding research scholar, teacher and academic administrator. His fundamental research on molecular dynamics supplies the basis for our comprehension of conformational analysis of organic ring systems. Pitzer has been president of Rice University and Stanford University. He is a member of the National Academy of Sciences and has received the Presidential Medal of Science. In his lecture Pitzer will present and analyze certain basic theoretical problems in chemical bonding. The bonding in noble gas compounds involves a phenomenon called hypervalence. It is not basically new, having been known for a long time, but as manifested in the noble gas compounds, it focuses on certain of these basic problems.

Repaving to close Agronomy

Traffic entering Agronomy Road from FM 60 will be blocked about May 1 as reconstruction of the road begins at Texas A&M. During construction, traffic to and from the College of Veterinary Medicine research farms, USDA entomology research laboratories, Purchasing & Stores building, the motor pool facility and forestry lab will have to enter Agronomy Road from its north end. Vet school officials have announced that during phase one of the construction — expected to be completed around Sept. 1 — a temporary access road to the student parking lot from FM 60 will be laid. The access road will be west of the Agronomy Road entrance, at the east end of Parking Lot 38. That lot entrance will be closed at the completion of construction.

Bookstore requests due

The deadline for eligible Recognized Student Organizations to apply for Bookstore funds is 5:00 p.m., March 31, 1978. Please have your budget request completed, signed, and turned in to the MSC Student Finance Center on or before March 31, 1978.
