The president was quoted as saying, "We've got a lot to do, but we've got a lot to do, and we'll get it done," which could be seen as a sign of his commitment to the job.

On Wednesday, the White House announced that President Reagan would travel to California for a two-day swing through the state to meet with state officials and to discuss economic issues.

Reagan's visit to California comes after a series of speeches and meetings in which he has discussed economic issues, including tax reform and job creation.

Reagan's trip to California is part of a larger strategy to increase his visibility and to establish himself as a leader on the national stage.

Despite some opposition from some in the Democratic Party, Reagan's trip is expected to be successful in increasing his popularity and building support for his policies.

On the other hand, some economists have criticized Reagan's economic policies, arguing that they are not sustainable and that they will ultimately lead to a recession.

In conclusion, while Reagan's visit to California is expected to be successful, it is important to consider the potential impact of his policies on the economy and the long-term implications for the country.
