White: more can be done in drug war

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas does not face as much danger from an invasion by another country as it does from the invasion of drugs, Gov. Mark White said Monday.
 "If we cannot stop a DC3 coming across the Mexican border (with drugs) how can we stop an invasion from another country?" the governor asked the Texas Daily Newspaper Association.

White said he thinks much more could be done to stop the drug flow into Texas and other Gulf states.

"Our federal government is not doing all it can to protect us," White who has taken part in recent anti-drug conferences in New Orleans and Miami with other governors. "I cannot understand how we can spend as much as we do and have so little protection."

White told the daily newspaper editors and publishers that the current Legislature has problems because our revenues have not grown as much as expected and we have a very significant shortage.

He said the continued decline in the growth of oil and gas revenues has convinced him and legislative leaders of one thing.

"The most important purpose we have in government is to build a broader base of revenues," White said "and I predict we will be able to do this."

He stressed the fast growing cooperation between the state's established industries and the new high tech electronics.

Bullock

talked to the TDNA, told reporters he was "somewhat surprised" at Bullock's remarks.

White said that he thought the Legislature had the responsibility "to see to the direction of these funds and that they are well spent on our priorities."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said he had talked with Bullock and already had his staff working to see how much of the local funds could be brought under the Legislature's spending process.

However, Hobby said he would not favor bringing all local funds under legislative oversight.

Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, head of the House Higher Education Committee, said she thought Bullock "was mixing apples and oranges."

"He's talking about local funds that are generated for causes for which the state will not pay and mixing them with causes that the state does pay," she told reporters.

Kenneth Ashworth, commissioner of the Texas College Coordinating Board, said, "It's not like a huge slush fund. To say that they're able to apply the funds for instructional purposes is inconceivable."

Bullock said the money in the local funds of colleges and universities comes from everything from library fines to football tickets.

He pointed out that the $3.4 billion the schools got from the assorted programs, business enterprises and gifts almost equals the $3.8 billion the Legislature gave higher education over the past two years.

"In other words, the Legislature's appropriations to higher education are only half the picture," Bullock said.

He said the local funds cannot be included in the comptroller's revenue estimate.

"It is money that never goes through the state treasury," Bullock said. "It is money that isn't accountable to the Legislature. How it is raised and how it is spent rests solely in the hands of college officials."

He said income from these outside enterprises is growing by as much as 17 percent a year. Despite the schools' spending from the funds, there is now a balance of $2 billion remaining from the 1983-84 period, Bullock said.

Bullock stressed that he is not saying there is anything wrong with the way schools maintain the local funds or how they spend it.

"But it would make good business sense for the Legislature to get an accounting of this money and take it into consideration in setting priorities for the limited state tax dollars they have available," he said.

"Politically, I think a tax bill is out," Bullock told the newspaper editors and publishers.

"In the next two years we will have a 14.5 percent more money than the past two years. We can live within it."

"In conclusion, Texas ain't broke, but sometimes I wonder why it is not. A little more of this and it damn sure will be."

White told reporters that a college tuition increase was a matter for the Legislature to decide. He said he had always opposed to increasing tuition for Texas residents unless the state sets aside money for qualified students to afford a college education.

"For out-of-state residents, I think a tuition increase is called for," White said.

"There certainly needs to be a tuition increase," Hobby told reporters.
