Computer art on exhibit

A panel of Texas A&M professors discussed various uses of computer graphics at the opening of an exhibition of computer art and graphics Tuesday.

In a brief introduction to the discussion, Dr. Gordon Eaton, Texas A&M vice president for academic affairs, said that because computers are becoming "user friendly," their importance in the future is increasing.

Eaton said that graphics are beginning to merge into the computer mainstream.

Bruce McCormick, a computer science professor at Texas A&M, described the history of computer graphics. The first images were created in 1952, he said. In the late 1950s and the early 1960s, the invention of the TX-2 computer made visual presentation of data possible.

However, the first computer graphics program was not written until the 1960s, he said.

Edgar Meyer, a professor in the department of biochemistry and biophysics, noted the importance of computers in research of molecules. The functions of molecules in the human body can be studied by using three-dimensional images, he said.

Computer graphics also can be used in geographical research, Forest Science Professor Robert Maggio said.

McCormick is optimistic about the future of computer graphics. With the combination of the talents of artists and scientists, advancements and improvements should be made, he said.

The computer graphics exhibit, "SIGGRAPH '83," will be in Rudder Exhibit Hall from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. daily through April 11. Admission is free. SIGGRAPH, which is short for Special Interest Group for Computer Graphics, was brought to A&M by the Office of Cultural Development and several other University divisions and departments.

Expelled student files suit seeking her readmittance

By TAMARA BELL

A student's personal problems are a consideration when a college is deciding whether someone should be expelled, Dr. E.D. Gage of the Texas A&M College of Veterinary Medicine said Tuesday.

But Bonny Jo Eason claims the veterinary college has expelled her without considering her unusual circumstances. Eason filed a suit last week in the 85th District Court in Bryan asking for readmission to the college's professional program and for monetary compensations.

"Time and time again we readmitted her after semesters on scholastic probation," Gage, the veterinary school's associate dean for academic programs, said.

She could have dropped out during her periods of difficulty, he added, but she didn't take that option.

Eason and her lawyer, Larry Watts of Houston, were unavailable for comment.

According to her suit, Eason, while pursuing her career at Texas A&M, was raising three sons alone after her second divorce. After her first semester in the Fall 1978 she had a 1.5 grade point ratio and was placed on scholastic probation. A 2.0 GPR is required by the University.

The suit states that the following fall she brought her cumulative GPR to 2.25. However, Eason was put back on scholastic probation in May 1982 when her grades included a D and an F.

She was required to maintain a 2.5 GPR after her readmittance to the college six months later. Generally, a 2.0 GPR is needed to stay in the program.

Eason, the suit states, returned to the college in Spring 1983. But because of personal traumas, including an unsuccessful third marriage, she failed to meet the "arbitrary and extraordinary requirements imposed upon her."

However, according to the suit, Eason had maintained a cumulative GPR of 2.0. She was dismissed in May 1983. She lost an appeal of the decision the following month.

The suit names Texas A&M and 11 professors as defendants.

Eason will have to obtain legislative permission to bring this case against the state, said A&M system associate general counselor Jerry Cain.

Student Senate will vote on protest bill

The Student Senate will vote on a bill tonight that calls on the University to take "appropriate measures" to stop all protesting and demonstrations in and around the Memorial Student Center complex.

Robert Hill, the bill's sponsor, said the bill was designed to prevent demonstrations on the grass around the MSC.

"This bill is not designed to violate students' First Amendment rights," he said. "The bill is to remind students that the MSC is a memorial and to reinstate the MSC's memorial status."

The Senate also will vote on a bill requesting that the University Housing Office reserve dormitory space for single graduate students entering Texas A&M.

A bill calling for the establishment of coed dormitories on campus will go before the Senate.

The Senate also will vote on a bill that offers solutions to the campus bicycle problem.

The bill, sponsored by Jim West, recommends that the University close the interior of the campus to bicycle traffic.

The bill also calls for all bikes to be registered with the University Police and that the bicycles' owners pay a $3 registration fee.

The Senate meeting will begin at 7:30 p.m. in 204 Harrington.
