Gay rights

 the change, saying passage would grant minority status to homosexuals and legitimize their lifestyle.
 The proposed changes would have amended Houston's civil service and affirmative action practices to include the term "sexual orientation." The original practice stated that only "race, color, age, disability, sex or national origin" could not be considered for hiring, firing or job promotions.
 However, the referendum failed by a 4-1 margin.
 Goodman said he was against the referendum because it did not cite cases of discrimination.
 "I was against the thing here in Houston because there was no need for it," he said.
 Goodman says he is for "people's rights" however.
 "I don't think homosexuals have the right to go into a classroom and show their views," he said.
 Lamarche said he supports gay rights, but like Goodner, he is not in favor of everything that homosexuals believe.
 "I'm prepared to talk more generally about the backlash against the group," Lamarche said.
 On the other hand, Lamarche favored the Houston referendum that Goodman opposed.
 "I favor those types of referendums that prevent employment and housing discrimination," he said.
 The debate will be Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Rudder Auditorium.
