see more housing in the area," Caldwell said. "There hasn't really been a lot of housing built since the '80s."

An article in Money Magazine in 1991 listed Bryan-College Station as the third most livable area in the United States.

Harwell said the article was one of the factors contributing to the recent growth. "That article at least gave people an idea where we are," Harwell said.

Hazleton said this article may have given Bryan-College Station publicity, but it probably didn't make people want to move here.

He said 2,000 or 3,000 people have been added to the Bryan-College Station labor force since last year.

Three new restaurants opened in downtown Bryan this summer, and many businesses expanded.

"We've had an explosion of business in downtown Bryan," said Elizabeth Miller, manager of the Mainstreet Project in downtown Bryan. "Since January 1992, we've had $22.3 million worth of investment by the private sector in the downtown area."

Miller said this growth can be attributed to incentives and a desire to appeal to students.

"We have a loan program that helps businesses get started," Miller said. "There's a renewed interest in the downtown area."

"A lot of businesses are interested in capturing the student market," Miller said. Hazleton said he sees the Bryan-College Station area continuing to grow.

"But it will be a controlled growth," Hazleton said.

Hazleton said, "In the '80s, the University grew so rapidly. Now that is no longer occurring."
