NO FALTES!

information leading to arrest of a 19-year-old girl who died in the explosion, said through a spokesman she wanted the killers to be held in the grief they caused.

"If they do catch these criminals," she said in a telephone interview, "maybe they'll see this and see how much it hurt me, and hurt my family, and hurt other people. They destroyed our lives, and homes."

Rescue teams used fiber-optic cameras and lighting devices as the slow search of the nine-story bulk building. They briefly suspended their work so that the structural columns could be shared to avert a cave-in.

Surgeon Rick Nelson conveyed the grimness of the search scene. "There was a pile of rubble, with bodies scattered," he said. "I was lying on top of the bodies without knowing it."

The dead included at least 12 children. Volunteers were hearing children screaming, seeing tiny faces covered in blood and plaster.

"This is the time to focus the mission," said Steve Lett, a Missouri rescue team member who found a child's leg in the debris. "It's the first, emotion second."

Worried friends and relatives of the missing gathered at St. Luke United Methodist Church, where the Red Cross posted a victims list. Clusters of photographs of the missing some stayed to eat, talk, counselors or sleep.

"It's just not knowing," said 44-year-old Carl Johnson, awaiting word of his son who worked in the building. "I hope she's out. But if she's still in the building there's not much hope left."

Investigators said the building was rented April 17, packed with fuel-and-fertilizer explosives and parked outside the office building. The explosion Wednesday morning tore a hole half the structure and blasted a crater 8 feet deep and 30 feet across.

An axle thought to have come from the vehicle was found about two blocks away, according to a police spokesman on condition of anonymity. Major auto parts marked with an ID number, the ID number on a piece of axle enabled investigators to break the World Trade Center bombing case.

A federal law enforcement official who spoke on condition of anonymity said investigators believe the truck was from Kansas, and they are checking fertilizer dealers in that state to try to trace the fertilizer to the bomb.

The FBI issued sketches of the two suspects after seeing an artist to Junction City talk to witnesses.
