Owl Feathers Still Flying.

An account of the capture of the Rice Owl appeared in the city edition of Thursday's Houston Post. Here is the Rice account of the incident:

"After an absence of two nights and a day the Rice contingent which journeyed to College Station after the owl, returned to the institute Thursday morning. Altho they were unable to bring back the mascot, the fact that it was recovered from enemy hands and destroyed is regarded as a signal victory for the local collegians.

The owl was taken the night of the last Rice A. and M. basketball game, and brought in triumph to the waiting cadets. By the Aggies the owl was regarded as the spoils of war and an emblem of victory, since they were able to defeat Rice for the first time in two years, at Houston, the night it was brought out. Plans were made to put the bird in a prominent place during the two games which the owls are scheduled to play in College Station.

There was general rejoicing at the Institute when the news was received that the owl was no longer in hands of the Aggies. The men who accomplished the feat of entering the armory at A. and M. and recovering the owl, while over a thousand students slept within sound of the bugle received a big ovation when they enter-
