

when challenging begins and reveille.

When this is required, they will call successively in the numerical order of their posts, beginning at the guard house, each one giving the number of his post, repeating the hour of the night, then adding: "All's well." Thus: "No. 2, eleven o'clock. All's well." This call should be made, and the number of the post and the hour announced in a clear and distinct manner, without unduly prolonging the words.

In calling the hours of the night, No. 1 will, at the direction of a non-commissioned officer of the guard, call, No 1. (such) o'clock." After the call has pass ed around the chain of sentinels he will call "All's well."

NIGHT ORDERS FOR NO. 1.

After receiving an answer to his challenge calls, "Corporal of the guard (so and so)," repeating the answer to his challenge. He does not in such cases repeat the number of his post.

He remains in the position assumed in challenging until the corporal of the guard advances the person challenged to give the counter-sign or for recognition, when he resumes walking his post, or, if the party be entitled thereto, he salutes, and, as soon as the salute is acknowledged, resumes walking his post.
