Annual Meeting.

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS, April 21.

San Jacinto!

How it makes the heart of every Texan swell with pride when he hears this immortal name and how the heart of every member of the Austin Library society throbs with pride after the glorious success of yesterday evening. This being the date set for the eighteenth anniversary of the Stephen F. Austin Literary society. We decided to devote the entire program to Texas and her trials, victories and progress. Long ere the hour arrived at which the society was to be called to order, visitors poured into assembly hall. At 8 o'clock sharp the orchestra commenced to play soul inspiring music. The curtain was drawn revealing a scene which set every patriotic heart bounding with joy. The right of the stage was draped with a magnificent flag bearing the stars and stripes. The left was decorated in a similar manner, while to the back and occupying a central position, "The Bonnie Blue Flag." "The Lone Star of Texas" excited the admiration and thoughts of patriotism into the souls of all beholders as in the days of its glory.

It is useless for me to attempt to portray to you the scenic beauties that greeted the vision of the spectators during the entire evening. Had I the descriptive powers of a "Scott" I might perhaps do it justice but as I do not possess these powers it would be presumptuous for me to attempt it. After the music or rather the applause ceased, the President called the meeting to order and in a few beautiful and appropriate remarks bid the visitors a hearty
