

ele, think you it ever so small, others may think differently.

The A. and M. College now has a great number of alumni of whom she is justly proud, and they are naturally expected to aid the Battalion. Write us a letter, dear alumni, and let your brothers know of your success and fortunes. If you have an article you would like to see in print, send it in; we would be only too proud to publish it.

Alumni Department.

A. M. FERGUSON, EDITOR.

Alumni of the Texas A. & M. college are scattered over Texas and several other states. This issue of the Battalion will reach them as far as their addresses are known and perhaps this is a good way to have a word with them.

Do we intend to have a larger reunion than ever before next June? If so, there is only one way to reach that end, and that is for each one of us, individually, to write personal letters to those we know—especially old classmates—and urge their attendance. Do not stop with one letter, but keep the correspondence up and the subject fresh in their minds. A large attendance would mean a great deal to our Alma Mater. A large attendance would insure us a pleasant time, and a large attendance once, would mean a larger one next time. The meetings of late have been too much neglected. The attendance was too small. We ought to meet at least fifty strong. The College is moving along smoothly, doing her work well, even better than ever before, but she is not doing all she ought to do. She is full, but her capacity, which was a few years ago equal to the demand, is so no longer. She has friends enough but they lack organization and enthusiasm. Her reputation depends largely upon the Alumni, and they are scattered all over Texas and some are in other states. Each one of these should be a center of an active influence that will do the old College good. Public opinion needs to be stirred up on this subject. The college needs
