

he fulfills the arduous duties of his position in a manner to shed lustre on his name.

T. M. Kyle, '93, of Nursery, was back to witness the entrance of his brother, H. C. Kyle, '96, into the ranks of the association.

L. L. Lewis, B. S. A., '93, and M. S. '94, has been making a record that should make the whole college proud of having him as a graduate. He has since leaving here distinguished himself as a student at Ames College, Iowa; upon graduation there he accepted a position in the veterinary department of that college, and on June 1st, 1896, was elected veterinarian of the Oklahoma A. & M. college.

For the first time since his graduation in 1892 E. H. Sanvignet failed to put in any appearance at commencement. We learn that his absence was not on account of any dampening of his ardor for his alma mater, but being so far away as the City of Mexico, it was impossible for him to attend.

There was a larger proportion of the class of '94 present at the reunion this year than of any other class, and since that is the largest class that has ever graduated here, it is plain that there must have been quite a bunch of them. The roll call of the class showed that there were present Bruce, Dazey, Ferguson, Howell, Lewis F., Pittuck, Ross F., Rose, Sewell, Smither and Todd. Massenburg, now at Texarkana, promised to be on hand if the trains were running, and since he did not come we have been anxiously awaiting the announcement of some fearful railroad catastrophe in North Texas.

Geo. Grupe, '92, was of course on the grounds and enjoyed the pleasure of meeting his old friends and fellow students, while his demeanor was not affected in the least by the fact that his duties as assistant engineer of the college electric light and ice works kept him from attending the banquet.

It was regretted by all of his old friends that Dan Cushing, '91, now a student at Vanderbilt University, could not manage to come up along with his brother, who now stands at the head of the honorary members of the Alumni Association, elected under the new constitution.

Prof. H. Ness, '89, of the A. & M. College, was of course present at all of the meetings, both public and business, but we learn that he leaves soon for Ithaca, N. Y., where he will continue his graduate studies for an M.S. degree at
