

they be headed by the bold and dangerous spirits which rise up in troubled and evil times from the dark low depths of the surface, to plant and execute desperate deeds of violence.

These are practical communists, the system of communism favors them, they have nothing to loose, no home, no goods providently laid up and any change is for them an improvement.

That America today is teeming with such like characters who will dispute? That outbreaks such as have been portrayed have occurred in our own day who can deny? It is only a matter of time when an upheaval will follow.

The smouldering flames of discord and rebellion only await a favorable opportunity, and when they shall have reached adequate proportions, wo to America the guiding star of this enlightened century.

Then will the sons and daughters of Columbia, the home of the brave and the free, realize what now they are prone to discredit, the signs of the times tend towards dissolution and bid fair to sink our common birthright into the putrid slough of monarchy.

Just and wise government is essential for perfect union, peace and prosperity in the social community.

The justice and wisdom of the government are really the justice and wisdom of ruler and of the laws.

The proverbs of making enumerate the truth learned by general experience that the character of a nation, as good or bad, depends for its formation to a greater or less extent on the head that rules and directs its citizens.

This is but natural, for the ruler is perpetually exhibited to the people in the laws by which he is positively controlling or influencing the daily actions of the country.

Experience proves the truth, and it is also conformable to reason that the ruler who ordinarily follows an equitable medium between opposite extremes of rigor and laxism in
