

tional conclusion in favor of the one or the other; or, if possible, to discover a harmony between both. The student would therefore do well to read "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," by Drummond. I feel that I would be derelict in the duty assigned to me were I to fail to mention the valuable little book, "The Story of Language," written by our respected professor, C. W. Hutson. The book is replete with much valuable and suggestive information, indicating patient and untiring efforts in the great scope of research, which cannot but reflect great credit upon our beloved alma mater. I am sure no student ought to be without it.

In the scientific departments the addition made comprises agriculture, horticulture, botany, entomology, physiology, mathematics, mechanics, civil engineering, chemistry and military science. The scientific department of the library, especially in some branches, is sadly in need of good literature. But it is to be hoped that the beginning thus made will be steadily continued so that the true purpose for which the library exists may, in the near future, be fully realized.

William's Mistake.

A William Goat, with low-bowed head,
Rushed wildly forth to butt—
A moment later he lay dead
With a shattered cocoanut.
The fellow that he sought to crush—
The victor in the fray—
Turned out to be a centre rush,
Who met the goat half way.—Ex.