

dog" patent leather, while on the other was a dainty, light "toothpick" boot. Mr. Miller is still looking for the man who mixed up his wearing apparel. A young man—who was compelled to pass through the Grand Central station at Houston in search of a carriage at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning clad in a dress suit is also able to give some valuable testimony as to the pleasure of the trip.

*
* *

RAILWAY CLUB'S VISIT.

"I have lived in Texas for several years," said a prominent member of the Texas Railway club, who made the trip to College Station with that organization last Tuesday—he was an official of the Houston and Texas Central, by the way—"and I have frequently heard of the good work done by the Agricultural and Mechanical college; but never until my recent visit there did I have any adequate conception of the thoroughness and effectiveness of the curriculum of the institution, of the immense amount of detail handled, nor of the modern and up-to-date methods in use in all the various departments. The college is a credit to the state in the fullest possible degree implied by that term, and if the people of Texas could be made to realize just what the school is doing they would certainly see to it that the yearly appropriations are made more nearly adequate to the needs of the institution than are the present allowances."

The sentiments of this gentleman are indorsed by every member of the large party which visited the college