

by inch until within a foot of the line. Here with a din and a rattle in a last desperate effort Simpkins was shoved over the coveted goal line for a touchdown. Pierce missed goal. The minute and a half left to play in the first half was without gain for either side. The second half was a repetition of the first, with Sewanee getting around Prather's end with greater freedom and, also for a long gain, past Schultz, on a quarter-back trick play, which brought ball to A. and M.'s 5 yard line. On a similar play around Prather's end the touchdown was scored with but five seconds left to play.

Pearce missed the goal and the game ended with score of 10 to 0 in favor of Sewanee.

Sewanee earned her game by playing hard, fast, clean, aggressive football, when Brown's deplorable fumbles gave her the ball, through the sharp work of her ends, within striking distance of the A. and M. goal line. To those who witnessed the game it was evident that the game would have ended with a zip-zip score had not A. and M. fumbled in such a costly manner the Sewanee punts. However, as marriage is the only thing more uncertain than a football game, there are several critical occasions all plastered over with "what might have beens" if—yes, if—but that has no effect on history already made.

The Baylor Literary, Waco, contains a well written essay on Dante; also other literary productions that would do credit to any paper. Its appearance is that of unusual neatness. If we are permitted to make suggestions we would suggest that the Literary establish an Exchange Department.

The Mercury, Milwaukee, Wis., reports "President McKinley's Speech at his Milwaukee Banquet," "A Midnight Spread," and "A Day's Visit to Clairvoyants," as its leading articles. Besides, it contains a complete list of Literary, Campus and Class notes.
