The editors of the Battalion desire to explain why this issue of the paper is not as large this month as it was last commencement. In the first place, a shortage of funds has cut the space considerably; and then again all the cuts that would be of general interest may be found in the Longhorn, and it was deemed unnecessary to present them again, and especially since the cost of publishing would be largely increased. Heretofore, these pictures have taken up a large amount of space, and have added much to the good appearance of the paper, as well as at the same time giving the pictures to the students in a way that they would be easily kept; but, as explained above, the Longhorn has done this already.

For the session of 1903-04 the societies have elected an editorial staff which, if we may judge by the personnel of the editors, will get a College paper that will be a credit to the institution. T. P. Clouts is editor-
