COACH LUCID.

Con C. Lucid was born in the city of Dublin, in the "old country," an indefinite and (according to him) entirely irrelevant number of years ago. He came to this country as a boy, and spent several of his childhood years in Boston, Mass., which he still maintains is the imperial city of the United States.

He was educated at Notre Dame, and he learned the National game there. After leaving college he went into professional ball, as player and coach. His first experience of this kind was in the Pacific Northwest. Later he played minor baseball in the Southern League, in Louisville, and in Newark (International League). He played twelve years in "big time," with Brooklyn, Philadelphia and St. Louis. He came to the Texas League and his last engagement was in the South Atlantic League.

Mr. Lucid coached several of the league clubs while playing with them, working especially with the pitchers. He coached the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Texas, Rice Institute, and under his tutelage the Houston club of the Texas League captured the flag three seasons. For several seasons he was with the famous Millionaire Club of Orange Oval, New Jersey.

In the winter Mr. Lucid did sports—writing for the newspapers. During his career he was with the San Francisco Examiner, the Boston Herald, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, the Brooklyn Eagle, the Cincinnati Enquirer, the Fort Worth Record (under Mr. Clarence Ousley) and the Mexican Herald (Mexico City).

Mr. Lucid is a personal friend of Charlie Moran, and was to have coached the baseball team, even had Mr. Moran remained. His extensive experience in, and knowledge of, the great American pastime, leaves no room for doubt as to his ability. And anyone who has ever watched his handling of the various men on the squad realizes how close an observer of human nature he is. His motto is, "Know your men." Meaning that each man has different characteristics, different peculiarities, and must therefore be treated differently. Some must be driven, others led, but all must be taught to think for themselves. He doesn't want a machine, looking to him for continual instructions, but a bunch of quick-thinking, chance-taking, capable men, able to think for themselves, instead of the coach doing the thinking for the squad.

But above his ability as a coach, his undisputed success with the squad, it is his qualities as a MAN that give him his rapidly growing popularity with the whole corps. He makes regular nightly visits to the sick in the hospital, taking them magazines, fruits, etc., but principally a large stock of good cheer, a splendid mixer, he makes everyone about him at ease. He has the real Irish wit, the dry humor, that go to make life worth the living. With an unconquerable spirit that wins, it may be said of Con Lucid, as of "Captain Johnny"—"he is a true Irishman and a real gentleman."

THE INSPECTION.

Each year an officer detailed by the United States Army inspects the military department of the college. April 2, Captain Merry, General Staff, reviewed the regiment at 8 a. m. Immediately after the review he inspected the arms and equipment of the corps. Following this each of the three battalions preformed different military tactics and maneuvers. Captain Merry seemed very well pleased with the way in which these were carried out. Especially was he pleased by the knowledge of military tactics shown by the officers. Practical problems in military maneuvers were given the officers for solution. Their answers brought forth the comment that the regiment showed a marked improvement among its officers over two years ago, when Captain Merry was here last.

This inspection determines the rank of the college among military institutions. For several years past Texas A. and M. has been classed as a distinguished institution by the War Department. This is the highest rank given, and we hope to keep up our good record by again being rated as a distinguished institution.
