are arranged for and the services of a chaplain are arranged for.

He is permitted to receive guests and a building is provided for them.

11. In regard to his instruction in the camp, he is given a thorough course in athletics; is given lots of outdoor drill; athletic field meets are held; lectures are given by especially selected lecturers, etc.

We endeavor by example, and by teaching to accomplish the following with each student:

(1) To give him good health and erect carriage. To teach him to hold his shoulders back and his head up, so that he may look the world in the face.

(2) To teach him how to think logically and correctly and how to arrive at proper decisions in the shortest space of time.

(3) To teach him moral cleanliness, in order that he may receive the full benefit of his mental and physical powers.

(4) To teach him courtesy and agreeable manners.

(5) To teach him aggressiveness. To instill in him that idea of going after things and not waiting for them to come to him.

(6) To teach him such use of his mind and body as will increase his earning capacity in civil life.

(7) To instill in him a high sense of honor and an earnestness of purpose.

(8) To teach him to go about whatever work he has had to do with wholehearted enthusiasm and energy.

(9) To teach him respect for all lawfully constituted authority.

(10) To teach him that he must master any undertaking upon which he begins.

(11) To teach him patriotism and national service.
