

NEXT WEEK BIG TIMES TO
ALL AT OLD A. AND M.

and the enjoyment period entered upon. The grand march starts at 9 p. m., so make your arrangements accordingly because Kitty Gordon, Elsie Ferguson, Norma Talmadge or whoever you may be bringing down simply must not miss being in the style display. Intermission at 12 p. m. with recall to be sounded at 12:30 promptly—closing at 3 a. m. The admission is three Jewish ambitions per pair.

Friday night the Ross Volunteers as an organization, present the big dance of the series to the student body and their friends. The same hours, etc. apply here also. Capt. Waller T. Burns will lead the processional which will end by entering onto our second night of dancing enjoyment. No charges whatever outside of making it your duty to see that everyone has a good time.

As desert after a big luncheon or banquet, comes the Saturday night affair at which a minimum charge of one wheel will be made. This strictly informal affair starts at 8:30 p. m. and ends at midnight. Don't think of missing this one as it would be similar to missing that Camel after meals, etc. For stags, alias those unlucky creatures who either haven't the energy to note and care for some damsel or have been presented with a sack in the last few minutes of play, the following provisions are made: All dance encores are break-ins except the first dance on the first night; no break-ins until after the intermission on Friday night and all break-ins Saturday night.

No warnings or instructions need be issued as to how to conduct yourself on the floor—if you don't know by now, your presence is not desired. Everyone knows what is meant by desirable and we expect it of everyone as gentlemen to exercise your judgment. Cooperate with the management and make these dances a climax in their line.

COLLEGE POST MEETS

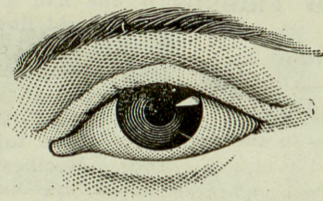

The College Post of the American Legion became a definite part of its members' thoughts last night at its first social gathering. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Mayo, as temporary chairman, in the Chemistry lecture room. It was decided unanimously that Mr. Ike Ashburn would preside over the social hour and awaiting his arrival, officers for the year were elected. Mr. Clarence Braden was made Post Commander, Mr. C. C. B. Warden, vice-commander; Mr. S. G. West, adjutant; Mr. R. H. Ramsey, historian and Mr. W. P. Orm, war risk clerk. Mr. Ashburn was nominated for the office of Post Chaplain but the election of this officer was postponed until his requirements could be definitely settled on.

An interesting discussion on the Bonus Bill now before Congress was held. Many who are in support of the bill and others who are against the spirit of the bill gave rather interesting opinions on the measure, and, though Congress has deferred action until after the decisions reached by the National Conventions have been made, the Post held a straw vote to determine the attitude of its members, and 23 voted against the bill to 21 for it.

Mr. Ashburn presided over the "experience meeting" and after starting the evening with a couple of sky-high stories he quietly related the three most impressive incidents in his military career as the sight of the great convoy, a Fourth of July celebration in England, and an actual war experience. The members were called upon one after the other to briefly state their names, organizations and most thrilling incident of their war career. There were men who fought the battles of Travis, Bowie, Taylor, Wheeler, and Leon Springs over here, the battles of Coniac Hill, and the Rest Camp in France; there were men who carry treasured in their hearts the memories of the S. A. T. C., the C. I. O. T. S., the R. O. T. C. and others who went down with torpedoed boats going over; men with thorough training in radio telegraphy who cheerfully unloaded car after car of corned beef; there were men who "got theirs" two hours after going into action, and there were others who outside of a bunch of machine gun bullets and high explosives had had no "experiences."

There was laughter and pathos in the stories of the men who had been an active part of the greatest of all games. The members of the College Post know each other now, and they feel that in the Post they have a common interest, a common responsibility. The hour of memories through the drifting smoke of good cigars has made this Post of the American Legion a vital element in the lives of its members.
