

are thrust upon them, they follow their instructions (and we know that they are difficult at times) with the interest of Aggies at heart, and consequently, the charm of all A. and M. spirit rests in the band.

Between talks of yell leaders and amid clamors of tumultuous voices, the Aggie band introduces us to the real traditional A. and M. spirit with the rendition of the quivering notes of "Wildcat" at our first "College Nites", it sticks with us faithfully during the short four years we spend here, never misses a yell practice, works extra time to make music for us, and always, if possible, heeds to the call of an Aggie friend for outside help. The name of Aggieland is broadcasted from the instruments of its band. Lastly, after the treasured sheepskins have been awarded and the prized senior rings have come to grace the fingers of those who have deserved, it is the Aggie band that comforts the hearts of the departing seniors, bids them God's blessing and good-bye for old A. and M. From the first "College Nite" to the last Final Parade, our band never slackens. ATTENTION, MUSICIANS! LET, US, THE A. AND M. STUDENT BODY, SALUTE YOU, THE AGGIE BAND OF 1923-24!

ment being that he will conduct himself in a manner befitting his position.

One of these scholarships is offered in Texas every two out of three years. Each school of education in the state is allowed to select a certain number of candidates; A. and M. being allowed five. Each candidate presents credentials and recommendations to a committee composed of educators of the state. From the total number, all but a few are weeded out from the credentials they present, and the remainder are called before the committee and the winner is selected by his personal qualifications.

Another scholarship will be given next year and as only ten men put in their applications this year, Mr. Mayo is very anxious to have more apply for the next one.

The general scheme of the Longhorn has already been decided upon, and the art plans are almost complete, although no absolutely definite plans have been made. There will be eight sections in the book, and they will appear in the order designated by the list of the different editors above. The great obstacle in the way of the staff is the determination of the plates which will be used by the different clubs. Pictures are being made at the studio every day, and it is VERY important that members of each organization visit the studio on the day set aside for them. This is only a small help which could be extended by the students; to the staff, it would be a great help and would lessen the worries which are confronting them. The old boys already know of the thrills, but the freshmen are reminded of those which will be yours shortly after next June when the two of you are scanning over the pages of the Aggie record book. Have your picture made stay behind the staff, and be ready to receive a great Longhorn for '24.

school; so the task of selling many more subscriptions than some of the others was assigned to first sergeant Wendler. He worked hard and earned the prize even though he was closely pursued in the contest by the first sergeants of Company "A" Signal Corps and Company "A" Infantry.

The Battalion appreciates the cooperation extended by all the students, especially the first sergeants, and only regrets that more prizes could not be offered; for there were many who deserved them. To the winner, alias the publishers of one edition of the Battalion, the Battalion staff extends its willingness to cooperate. It will take such extra editions to make the Battalion representative of the whole school by which it is published.
