

ART PRINTS AND BLUE PRINTS

Painters, authors, and musicians win fame and fortune by transmitting their conceptions to paper. Achievement can be completed merely with such expression of an idea. Not so with engineering. The design of a turbine or of a flat iron, once it is created, is not placed upon a pedestal in a millionaire's mansion, or in an art museum. It immediately goes into the shop—there to be executed. Its success is measured by the degree to which it fits manufacturing requirements. If it can't be manufactured economically it is a failure.

In an organization like Westinghouse there is a group of engineers whose chief interest and concern is the efficient, economical, large scale manufacture of electrical products. These men may be electrical engineers or mechanical engineers. They are primarily interested in shop practice and methods—in the same industrial problems as are the manufacturing customers whom Westinghouse serves.

The founder of Westinghouse was such an engineer. He possessed a marvelous faculty to inspire workmen and executives alike; there are many tales of men working nights and Sundays to help him complete a cherished plan.

Throughout all industry there is a call for men qualified as manufacturing engineers who can combine materials, machines, men, and methods with better and more efficient results.

Such men find pleasure and inspiration at Westinghouse—developing apparatus to help other manufacturing executives solve similar problems in every kind of industry.

This advertisement is fifth in a vocational series, outlining the fields for engineering achievement in the Westinghouse organization. Copies of the entire series will be sent to anyone requesting it.

There must be something attractive about Jim Forgason after all. At any rate it is a known fact that he received a long letter from a hotel maid who had seen his picture in a paper she had picked up in a room. Ah—another opportunity for romance at Aggieland.

“Bob Berry, didn't you sneak in this show?”

The first intercollegiate cross-word puzzle contest which was held in New York was won by Yale in record time.
