EXPERIMENT WITH FLU GERM MAY LEAD TO DISCOVERY

The other day Miss Ruth A. McKinney, one of the workers in the University of Chicago laboratory of Dr. Isadore S. Falk, complained of feeling ill. She was taken to the hospital, after a bit of her blood had been taken in a test tube.

Later she was found to have influenza. Germ from the culture taken from her arm was sprayed into the throats of monkeys, and they developed the "flu."

Thus the work of over a year was climaxed in what is believed to be the discovery of the deadly influenza germ.

Falk hopes that his experiments may result in the origin of a vaccine which, when sprayed into the throat, will prevent influenza.
