

Something ventured — nothing won!

Just think! If some one had not cheated, and looked— we would not know all about Lady Godiva, and her pretty horse.

She: "Some time I'm going to tell you all about myself."
He: "I'd sure like to know."

—Widow.

College men, as a rule, may be expected to be gentlemen, first and last, but not always.

Our idea of the ideal university to attend would be one in which the professors knew only their A, B, C's.

"What's the idea of the crowd at the church?"

"Oh, a co-ed's confessing her sins."

"Got its hair from the father, eyes from the mother and a voice from an auto horn, I think."

"My girl and I have great fun playing ping pong every night. Ever play?"

"No. How does it go?"

"We hit a little ball and when it rolls under the table we have to look for it."

"I know but where's the fun?"

"Under the table."

A colored gentleman working as a porter in a hotel, was asked if he could give a definition of tact. He replied:—

"Well, suh, I can give you an example. You know I cleans up around this hotel, and when the other day I stepped into the bathroom on de second floor an' there was a lady in there, I stepped right out again an' said, "Pardon me, suh!" Well, when I said 'Pardon me,' that was politeness, but when I said 'suh', that was tact!"

—Log.

She was only an optician's daughter but give her a couple of glasses and she'd make a spectacle of herself.

Voice over telephone (at three in the morning): "Who is this?"

Disgruntled one who has answered: "How in hell do I know?"

Boss—"Why did you spell 'peumonia' 'n-e-w-m-o-n-i-a?'"

Steno—"Because the 'k' on my typewriter wasn't working."

PLAY

Scene I—(Night in roadster)

He: "Will you?"

She: "No!"

He: "Get out and walk."

Scene II—(One evening later)

He: "Will you?"

She: "No!"

He: "Get out and walk."

Scene III—(The next night)

He: "Will you?"

She: "Yes."

He: "My God! What do I do next?"

—Jack-o-Lantern.

Judge: "And you say you were not intoxicated at the time of the accident?"

Prisoner: "I was as sober as judge, you honor."

Judge: "Ninety days."
