THE PAN

By D. B. Mc Nerney

The "book" is gradually closing—so suppose we turn back a few pages and uncover some of the outstanding mistakes that we have committed throughout the narration of the story that forms our expiring school year.

To enumerate them would be—well-nigh an impossible task and, too, while we recollected, there might be found many things which would have been far better off forgotten. It is for our own personal gain, however, that we may point out the danger spots and in doing so, map out a more successful plan for the coming year.

Our initial point—of attack, quite naturally, is that body of campus aristocracy familiarly known as the Senior class. The group of men who close their college careers with the coming of June 1931, should be commended rather than criticized at this happy time of their lives inasmuch as it is customary to send the graduates away with a slap on the back rather than a viciously applied kick, although the latter might possibly send us further if properly placed so as to not unseat our self-confidence too much.

The present Seniors—deserve praise for having spread a greater feeling of fellowship than their predecessors had evidenced. The petty faults are numerous and can only be discovered by a study of the individual, which we must carry on with this important idea in mind, that is, this is not West Point, nor a petty high school, for that matter, although many of us forget the former with sudden assumption of responsibility and fail to acknowledge the latter for fear of ridicule.

This year's Juniors—have displayed a greater feeling of liberty than usual, much to the grief of the authorities, at times. There have been attempts made to curtail these wanton youths by giving them more responsibility and less privilege but this has been nothing more than an unbalancing of the scales of simple justice which has a tendency to rub the fur the wrong way, result; wrangling and less cooperation. This state of affairs has brought out many things, and it will be interesting to observe the results next year.

To ridicule or praise—the other two classes might be unfair either way, as neither as a class has developed a distinguishing characteristic in two short years. Many new ideas have been introduced with the coming of '33 and '34 men. We hope they will be better because of them. It is a difficult matter to push aside tradition especially when so much is observed and cherished. Wise is the man who can blend the old and new, securing therefrom the proper and desirable mixture of ideas. A tradition should not be "scrapped" simply because it may be a bit discomforting to one particular group. Suppression of any premature outgrowth of egotistical "self-knowledge" that is typical of youths beginning college, is often desirable. Rather than abandon the idea, it might be better to seek less crude means of application.
