Thursday, Friday and Saturday at the Palace, "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back."

A breezy bit of melodrama that will amuse you completely. The ever-romantic Bulldog Drummond, portrayed by Ronald Coleman, is dragged through another of his hair-raising adventures. How they get away with the rank impossibility of the whole thing is something that is hard to figure out, but get away with it they do—and what's more make you like it immensely. The story would make a good one for some pulp-paper magazine, but the acting and settings pull it over—and the dialogue is A-1.

Never a dull moment. Jump right into the middle of the mystery in the first five minutes and its nip and tuck from then on. Comedy? Charles Butterworth patters thru the picture, trying to get a chance to stay home with his newly-wedded wife, but being jerked out of bed every hour by the insistent Drummond. Romance? The mighty Bulldog in a hopeless plight, surrounded by blackguards, trying to save his helpless lady love from the fate worse than death. Thrills? Cold-cockings, stick-in-the-backs, guns, knives, and corpses. Pure tripe, you say. But clothed in such gaudy, subtly humorous, amusing dialogue and acting that you'll never rue the day you saw it.

The swaggering, swashbuckling Drummond is a hero as we like our heroes. The menacing Warner Oland is a villain dastardly enough for the worst ones. Loretta Young is sweet enough for anybody to protect, and Una Merkel plays a blushing bride that is cheated of a blushing bride's just deserts.

The story deals with foreign crooks and mysterious disease. Drummond unravels the mystery in entirely satisfactory style. In short it's a good picture.

Cast: Ronald Coleman, Loretta Young, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, and Warner Oland.

Preview Saturday Night, Sunday and Monday: "The Count of Monte Cristo."

"Backward, turn backward, oh time in thy flight"—and take a look at a romantic story of a French adventurer back in those days when the field of honor wasn't a football grid and it was a lady's hand men sought. "The Count of Monte Cristo" is played by Robert Donat, the English player, and Elissa Landi. Each of his adventures is given due credit in the picture. Swordplay lends a little grandeur, and a sweet vengeance taken by the hero adds to the satisfaction. Alexander Dumas, the French writer of "Iron Mask," "Four Musketeers," and other romantic works, is the author of this adventure tale.

As a boy, Dantes, the hero, is terribly wronged by a zealous-old louse of a guy who gets bit by the green-eyed monster all because youth and romance beat his time with the girl friend. Dantes is sent away to the dungeons at Chateau d'If, and spends some time getting loose again. Thence homeward to take out a revenge on his persecutors. Meanwhile his lady gets married to another jakey and things seem black enough, but all ends right through several quick tricks of the dashing Count's.

It is a pretty picture, though, and done very well. It has some historical highlights in it, and is interesting, taken all around. It is a Reliance Pictures production, released through United Artists.

Cast: Robert Donat, Louis Calhern, Sidney Blackmer, and Raymond Walburn.

Tuesday and Wednesday at the Palace: "Death on the Diamond."

Sport murders are getting quite prevalent in the pictures. Last year saw a young football player ruthlessly bumped off in a football picture. Now we have a baseball player shot in the belly while trying to steal second. Man can't even indulge in a little recreation now.

The story is about the St. Louis Cardinals having a killer on their trail. One after another of the ball players are knocked off until the killer is exposed by the hero in the nick of time. Robert Young and Madge Evans do the love-making.

Farmers to Vote on Adjustment Program

A corn-hog referendum during the first two weeks of October by the contract signers of this year will determine whether or not an adjustment program for the years '35 and '36 is to be instituted.

After a year's experience with corn-hog contracts in '34, farmers are going to have a chance to register their decision on two questions: whether or not they want a program for next year, and if they do, whether or not they want a one contract-performed adjustment for '36. This means that everybody approving, farmers will sign only one contract dealing with all the restricted commodities, instead of several dealing separately with livestock, grain, and cotton.

On account of the great drought this year, however, the farmers have one assurance—they will not have to restrict any product more than they did in '34. This is to allow the grain reserves of the nation to be built up again.

County agents will conduct the voting, and unless the County Committee should grant a special privilege, only contract signers will get the chance to vote.

tire contest. Other members of the team making the trip were: C. D. McEver, Hillsboro; D. M. Neal, Yoakum; and L. D. Smith, Bryan, alternate.

The coach and team members left two weeks ago Tuesday and returned last Friday. Since they traveled by automobile, they took advantage of their surroundings and visited several of the leading dairy herds of the middlewest, including the famous Longview Jersey farm at Lee Summit, Missouri, and the Maytag Holstein Farm at Newton, Iowa.
