The secret of the chicken we get in the mess hall has been discovered. It appears that the poultry department has for years been trying to develop a special breed of fowl for mess hall consumption. This past summer it finally developed what is technically known as fowlus squadus or, more simply, the squad chicken. This animal has eight legs, eight necks and eight wings. The rest of the body consists of bones and feathers. It is hard to describe just what this creature looks like because it has never been seen alive. After its demise however, it is a very common sight and can be seen in the mess hall most any Sunday. It is rumored that the poultry department will attempt to cross a squad chicken with a centipede and develop a platoon chicken.

Freshman: Sir, is the seat of the Pope filled through inheritance?

(Silence) (More silence—then an outburst of violent laughter from the whole class at the expense of the unthinking freshman)

Professor: (With expression of strained consideration) —Of course—of course I will not be so conservative as to say that some Popes do not have children.
