OF ESQUIRE

As our cadet colonel, J. C. McHaney, is dictatorial in matters pertaining to our uniforms, it is only fitting that he should suggest our civilian wear. He is shown above, attired in the latest mode, having spent an enormous amount of time and no small amount of money to equip himself in the correct fashion.

Your attention is of course attracted right off by the rakish slant of the hat. This chic appearance, Joe's tailor tells us, is accentuated by the modern cut of the headgear—half as high in the back as in front. "Tyrolean shape," they call it . . . "half-back," too. And also Oxford Grey.

Joe seeks a conservative line with the double-breasted, black Oxford suit. Notice the new cut of the lapels.

Quite debonair, we say, with that Cambridge Grey d. b. Polo Top Coat slung over the arm. It hides pig-skin gloves, and a wool black-and-white muffler.

Shirt is Cluster Stripe, form-fit. Tie: black and grey regimental stripe to match.

And! Kiltie Check socks, black calf, military-heel, wing-tip Oxfords—with new popular extension soles.
