Captain Phil Enslow's pistol aggregation brought home the bacon again Saturday night when they defeated the Bayou Rifles pistol team of Houston by an aggregate of 1524 to 1490. The A. & M. Freshmen team was third with a score of 1375.

Bob Shells gleaned the lion's share of the honors. He took the medal for the high aggregate with a total of 274 and also the medal for time firing with a 94. Bob and Gene, the two Shells brothers on the team, continue to fight each other for honors, but in this match Bob ran away from Gene. Gene completely missed the target one time. It was the first time that Gene had ever missed a target.

The Aggies won eight out of the ten medals that were awarded. T. S. Bailey of the Bayou Rifles won the slow fire medal with a 76, and E. F. Dickens won the rapid with a 93.

Members of the winning Aggie team who gleaned the medals are Bob Shells, John Ashford, W. A. Becker, Gene Shells, Silverman, and Stone.

been distributed throughout his country. He has headed many commissions to improve agriculture and the textile industry in China. He has been first in the Orient to adopt the newest American industrial methods and machinery, and his three cotton mills have taken first place in China on the quality of goods produced.

The many other interests of this active personality include the creation of the Chinese Industrial Bank in 1919, and the organization in 1921 of the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange for which he was chairman of the board of directors for eighteen consecutive years. He retired from all active participation in the cotton mills when he was sixty years old, in 1935, but he retained his directorships in the Chinese Industrial Bank and Cotton Goods Exchange.

Since the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese War Mr. Moh's activity has been great. Owing to military operations in Shanghai, he left for Chungking in May 1938, to receive a well-earned rest. But so distinguished a business man could not be overlooked in this national crisis, and he was appointed to organize the Committee for the Promotion of Agricultural Economics.

His committee is responsible for the promotion of the production of farm crops and hand-machinery in conjunction with the program carried on by the agricultural institutions in each province. His work has bettered Chinese economic conditions and has helped to increase the national resistance to the Japanese armies.

SUMMEY WRITES ARTICLE FOR ENGINEERING MAG

Dr. George Summey, Head of the English Department, has recently written an article for the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education on "English Composition in Colleges of Engineering." This article of Dr. Summey's will make up part of a report being made by a committee of investigation sponsored by the Carnegie Foundation regarding English instruction in colleges and universities and how effective it is, its aims, and the general effects of it.

The Carnegie Foundation has appropriated $2,500 for this purpose and a questionnaire is being sent out to the English departments of various American colleges and Universities, to the presidents and deans of different departments in these institutions and to employers of engineering students.

Dr. Summey's article will probably be published in the April issue of the Journal of Engineering Education.

Williams Speaks At Occupational Meeting in Houston

E. L. Williams, head of the Department of Industrial Education, addressed the regional meeting of the National Occupational conference held in Houston Jan. 12 and 13. Mr. Williams' address was delivered on the afternoon of Jan. 12; his subject was "Interpreting Occupations to Young People."

Mr. Williams' address pertained mostly to those students who were seniors in high school and who are thinking about leaving school, going to work and starting life for themselves. Mr. Williams pointed out that too much attention is given to the high school students who plan on entering college instead of those who are getting out in the world for themselves.

"It is equally as important," he said, "to think of these other students, especially when we realize that only one third of the high school students enter college."

Mr. Williams went on to discuss the various occupations that might be presented to young people to consider and concluded by saying, "It is up to us educators to inform him (the high school student) of these opportunities (jobs), help him select one, prepare as far as possible for it, get the job, and then continue in our high schools as far as his interests and abilities will permit."

George B. Wilcox, Professor of Education, was also supposed to speak but was unable to attend due to T.S.T.A. legislative problems.

ness' who are under-physicianized and in proportion to the respective populations more of these probably are in rural areas," the board said. "A number of outstanding physicians of America have recognized and admitted the existence of such conditions both to urban and rural areas."

The board said its recommendation regarding negro students emanated from "leading white and negro citizens" and it was convinced the State should provide the students the opportunity for graduate and professional training.
