Anne Moore—

August 28. Actually, however, Miss Moore returned to College Station October 4.

The party, composed of 18 girls and a chaperon, landed first in France where five days were spent in Paris. "Paris is easily the most beautiful city in the world," Miss Moore pointed out, "but it was in Germany that we received our first big surprises. The people there seem to be rather resigned to their fate."

"But as for the German people not enjoying themselves, that's wrong," Miss Moore and five other girls in the party visited Berlin's famous Haus Vaterland, a huge night club composed of twelve smaller night clubs representing typical clubs of 12 different nations. "The night we visited the Haus Vaterland," Anne said, "there were over 20,000 people there and very few of them were tourists like ourselves. And at that, we were there on a week night. The people didn't seem to have a thought of war. They were enjoying themselves to the fullest."

Miss Moore pointed out that the American night club was decorated in western style, in accordance with the German's idea of our nation. One thing in particular, she said, struck the girls as unusual. Throughout Germany, and Europe in general, the people were very friendly—even going out of their way to do things for tourists. "Evidently," Anne went on, "the German-Italian alliance is purely political, as the two races seem to hate each other fiercely."

As the party left one nation and entered another, they would find it necessary to sample several different brands of cigarettes in order to find one that they liked. In all nations except Italy they finally succeeded, but the Italian cigarettes were so "rotten" that the girls were forced to buy American brands—at fifty cents a package.

Prague was nearly inaccessible. All tourists were forbidden entrance. However, through the perseverance of their chaperon, the girls were successful in entering the city, after being told to "Get out as soon as possible. Stay only one night." "The city," Anne said, "was like a morgue—the most dismal place of the entire trip. German secret police were all over the place."

One of the trip's anecdotes that Anne related concerned the time that the party entered the League of Nations Building for a tour of inspection. Guides were supplied for each race. The head guide instructed all German-speaking people to go one way, French-speaking people were directed to another place, English speaking persons still another way, and "you Americans wait here a few minutes."

In Belgium everything was blamed on Hitler. One guide even blamed the inclement weather on the Nazi leader.

While in Italy the party had a brief glimpse of the Pope. "He is the kindest, most wonderful-looking man I have ever seen," Anne declared.

"Italians," Anne went on, "seem to like Mussolini fairly well, although they recognize that he has many faults."

"Throughout the entire trip the food and service were wonderful," Anne further pointed out that, as might be expected, all of Europe was seething with activity. The people seemed to have resigned themselves to the inevitable, but were hoping for the best.

After traveling through nine nations, the party prepared to embark for Ireland. With no indication of the exciting voyage to fol-
