GRAND OPENING OF NEW QUEEN THEATER PLANNED BY OWNERS

Bryan's New Queen Theater is to be opened by the Bryan Amusement Company Tuesday at 8 p. m., Mrs. Morris Schulman, manager of the company, has announced. Music by the Aggie Band will open the program, and refreshments may be served. "Fifth Avenue Girl" will be the show for the opening night. Class A pictures are assured, Mrs. Schulman said.

Modernistic is the theme of the new building from inside to outside. On the outside the most prominent feature is a revolving neon-lighted crown for the "queen." High white front walls make the name of the theater stand out boldly.

On the inside the first door opens into a small anteroom. The next set of doors reveal another small lobby and the main auditorium of the theater, with stairs leading to the balcony on the left. Together, the auditorium and the balcony will seat 550 customers at one time, a figure that nearly doubles its former seating capacity. A rearrangement of the seats assures a clear view of the screen from every seat in the house, and there will be no angle views.

Other modernistic improvements include deep plush carpets for the floors, indirect lighting throughout the house in varying shades and colors, restrooms equipped with streamlined furniture, and a light-hand rail for the stairs.

New equipment for sound and projection have been added, and air-conditioning with a carrier refrigeration unit has been installed.

bookings at it is physical possible for them to fill must be turned down each season. On September 30th the Don Cossacks launched their tenth American tour of 100 consecutive concerts, and will sing in a different city every night until they sail to fill immediate European engagements.

Arranging for transportation and lodgings for the giant choristers, few of whom speak any English, presents numerous problems to the Don Cossacks' American manager, Paul H. Stoes, who estimates that his Chorus is the costliest musical importation ever to have been attempted for this country.

in length. The spears range from four to seven feet in length and are tipped with steel, bone, or wood. Too, there is shown a long tube through which are blown small wooden darts—which are evidently poisonous.

Along with these Indian relics are several cases of insects which were taken from the same locality. Huge butterflies covering the palm of one's hand are shown. They are of a vivid blue-green color, and change their color readily in accordance with the angle of light. Other butterflies shown are brown with intricate wing design. In the same cases are shown a few grotesquely large grasshoppers, measuring six to eight inches long, and colored a deep red and gold. Lastly are displayed two enormous tarantulas whose lengths from the tip of the forelegs to the tip of the rear legs approach ten inches.

Supplementing this collection are a few goat-skin paintings of a native artist.

Harding Speaks—

Dr. Ide P. Trotter, head of the Agronomy Department. Dr. Trotter also reported the results of the Civil Service examinations taken by many agricultural seniors last April. According to the reports, Texas Aggie seniors ranked high in the examinations compared with other agricultural seniors throughout the United States.

An interesting incident occurred to Harding in connection with his tour of Texas. College officials, working out details for his Texas visit, suggested that he take a plane from Corpus Christi to Dallas following his appearance at Texas A. and I. College at Kingsville, and received the following telegram in reply from the editor:

"I rode in one with Orville Wright in 1909; he had me sitting up there in a rattle chair lashed to his damn machine; he was the aviator and I was ballast and I felt just like that; took place at College Park and scared me out of a month's growth; he just suddenly reached out and plucked me from a group as about the right weight to go aloft. Since then does so happen I have not been in an airplane and just as I was getting to like it that time he came down. Prefer train."

of fiery Cossack steeds, and spent their early lives galloping across the wide plains of the Ukraine and leading the charges of the Czar's traveling unit.

For convenience and checking purposes the Chorus is divided into nine groups of four men each, and as the rapidity with which they must travel to keep concert engagements many miles apart on successive nights obliges them to "travel light", the entire worldly possessions of the four men must be distributed between four medium-sized suitcases, the allotment to each group. A fifth suitcase contains kitchen utensils to be used by the group, as the Don Cossacks have never had a chance to accustom themselves to American cuisine and prefer their own native concoctions. Finding hotels in each of the hundred or more American cities they visit during a season where 36 rooms on one floor are available and where cooking in the rooms is permitted, is just a small part of Mr. Stoes' job. The company manager who accompanies the Chorus on tour has his hands full, too, what with being obliged to hunt continually lost room keys at the most unearthly hours, talking the singing gentlemen out of their ancestral weakness for a little more vodka than will keep them gentlemen, extricating stray dried herrings and other odoriferous effects from luggage into which they strangely find their way, and bailing the choristers out of jail for innocent infringements of the American law that after ten years' acquaintance is still very much of a puzzle to most of them. As the chorus does not stay in any one place long enough to allow for laundry of the singers' costumes, the traditional sapphire blue, scarlet-lined coats of the Cossacks have been given up in favor of simple black tunics, one or two of which can suffice for an entire season. The high conical Astrakhan hats, too, were found impractical for traveling and far too popular as souvenirs with visitors to the Cossacks' dressing rooms; so the chorus now sings hatless.
