Ft. Worth Stock Show Opened With Big Parade Friday

FORT WORTH — The gates swung wide to open the forty-fourth annual Southwestern Exposition and Fat Stock Show Friday evening as a colorful rodeo parade moved through the business district of Fort Worth.

At least ten bands from cities all over Texas were in the line of march, which included a splash of colors as 175 cowboys and cowgirls (top rodeo riders of the world) passed in review during the three-mile parade.

Amon Carter, Fort Worth publisher and civic leader, and Mayor T. J. Harrell led the parade.

From all over the continent, rodeo contestants have been arriving during the past week to participate in the world championship contests with prizes of $20,000 at stake. Show herds from some of the leading livestock farms of the country have arrived to compete for prizes of $27,000.

Sixteen teams from agricultural colleges in 13 states are competing in the general livestock judging contests for students. From the standpoint of entries, it is the second largest contest of its kind in the nation.

William Owens was born and raised in Paris, Texas, the heart of the "sticks" of East Texas. It was here that, as a boy, he learned the games and songs that make up the folklore of our own people, and he wrote a book about them, "Swing and Turn." In 1936 his book was the official publication of the Texas Folklore Society. Owens has a master's degree from the University of Iowa, and is working toward his doctor's degree at the same place. He has been at A. & M. for three years, during which time he has recorded the "folk" music of the Aggies. Among his collection is the beautiful "Silver Taps" played in harmony by the bugles, as well as "Home Sweet Home," played from the Academic Building, and the Band "fish" version of "Silent Night", sung here each Christmas season.

(Another article will appear in an early issue of The Battalion concerning the stories behind the collecting of Mr. Owens' records.)

'Bat' Editor Offers To Hold Coats In Harvard-Yale Duel Over 'Oomph Gal'

Battalion editor Bill Murray says he'll hold the coats in the pending Yale-Harvard editors' duel over Ann Sheridan.

The sons of Eli have threatened to shed blood over the slur cast on Ann Sheridan, red-haired "oomph girl," by the Harvard university Lampoon.

Yale-Harvard hostilities are perennial but the Lampoon's choice of Miss Sheridan as the "movie actress most unlikely to succeed" incited the Yale men to a frenzy. A stormy session was held on the campus by the board of the Yale Record and afterward, Roy S. Fox Jr., the Record's editor, sent a telegram to J. Sussell Bowie, editor of the Lampoon, challenging him to a duel.

"European code," Fox specified, "in the interests of American womanhood and the American ideal of femininity..." "Your ungentlemanly attitude toward Miss Ann Sheridan I find unbearable and unbecoming an intelligent person," he added. "Statement you made concerning Miss Sheridan's histrionic ability obviously untrue... Retraction your only out."

In addition, Yale students notified Miss Sheridan they would be honored to have her as guest at Cambridge, Mass., March 7.

—If Harvard Lampoon's editor has to fight a duel with the Yale Record editor over Oomph Girl Ann Sheridan, his choice of weapons is the telegraph—at 155 miles.

their junior prom for the weekend. John C. Nemia, retiring chairman of the Record, messaged her: "Representing the Yale undergraduate body, I am enraged at Harvard's scurrilous attitude toward you and your charms. I would like to show you that Yale men are yours. Will you come to the Yale junior prom as my guest. I and 2000 other admirers hope with all our hearts that you will accept."

Arrangements for the duel rested with Bowie who, by the European code, has the choice of weapons.

Coach Harry Faulkner has issued a call for freshman baseball players. Anyone wanting to try for the freshman baseball team should get in touch with Faulkner between 3 and 6 o'clock today at the freshman diamond behind the varsity diamond.

This is Faulkner's first year as coach of the freshman team. He comes direct to A. & M. from professional baseball circles.
