Anson Weeks—

Featured in his orchestra are Eunice Clarke, Wes Hite, and Bud Prentis, who under the skillful guidance of Anson's baton will bring the corps the music for which they are famous—that which pleases the college groups and at the same time is enjoyed by older crowds.

In addition to winning fame for himself Anson has provided the field of entertainment with many notable successes. One of his first proteges was the younger brother of the famous Bing Crosby, Bob. Bob got his start while Weeks was playing in San Francisco.

Griff Williams and Xavier Cugat, both of whom are directing orchestras of their own now, owe their start in music to Weeks.

Having provided the music world with these outstanding artists, Anson has turned his attentions to new talent in the hopes of discovering and promoting another star, and his efforts seem to be quite successful in the discovery of the sensational new vocalist, Eunice Clarke, now being featured with his orchestra.

Weeks started his career as an orchestra leader by quitting the University of California the day after his registration, forsaking a football career, organizing his own orchestra and starting on his road to fame.

The success of the orchestra's engagements on CBS and NBC nationwide broadcasts led to many important engagements in the east, middle-west, and south-west. Among these conquests were: St. Regis Hotel, Roosevelt Hotel, and Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York; the Aragon and Trionon Ballrooms and the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago, and the Rice Hotel in Houston.

Having secured the public's approval of his screen ventures, it is likely that Anson will take his orchestra back to the studios upon their return to the west coast.
