swimming in Buffalo Bayou, he said.

Homer's father made up for the cost of feeding Puss by cancelling his burglary insurance. Negroes won't come within a mile of the ranch on Katy Road, he said, and all the neighbors are afraid to venture onto the homestead unless the family has been notified and the lion is tied.

He roams the prairies and comes home at will, and is enjoying his vacation on the ranch. He may go back to A. & M. with Homer when he returns next fall—the family hasn't decided. The college boys, and even the professors, are very fond of Puss, and he was allowed to run free on the campus every afternoon for his exercise.

Although Homer is working his way through college, he has not let this nor his pet, Puss, interfere with his school work. His report card this year has reported only "A" and "B" grades.

However, Puss will be glad to see Homer again, his family believes. At night he cries (not a sissy cry, but a roar heard for a mile around the ranch) for Homer, and when his master doesn't answer, he lies down beside "Tiny" the fox terrier and goes to sleep.

"If you want to know something about the destruction of Mother Earth in Texas take a plant trip at a low altitude," Mrs. Helen H. Davis, former vice director and state home demonstration agent of the Texas A. & M. College Extension Service, recently told more than a thousand rural women gathered at the fourteenth annual short course on the campus of Texas State College for Women, Denton.

Dr. R. F. Chandler To Be Visiting Prof Next Summer

Dr. Robert F. Chandler Jr., assistant professor of forest soils, department of agronomy, Cornell University, will be visiting professor of agronomy at A. & M. from June 10 to July 20.

Dr. R. F. Chandler

In order to be of service to all groups interested in forestry, and particularly those interested in the problems of forest soils in the Southwest, graduate courses in forest soils will be offered during the first term of the 1940 summer session under Dr. Chandler. Since no such courses have been offered before in the Southwest, and since the State of Texas has about 35,000,000 acres of forest lands which annually yield products valued at $50,000,000, these courses and their attendant field trips should present a valuable opportunity to study forest soil problems in a new area, it was said by Dr. Ide P. Trotter, head of the A. & M. Department of Agronomy.

Ecologically the Texas forest areas are particularly interesting because they represent both the typical southern pine forests and the tension zone where the humid forest areas meet the semi-arid tall grass prairie of the Southwest. College Station lies in the center of this transition zone. The wide range of soil and climatic conditions found in Texas, and the 225 species of trees in the state make it an especially significant place in which to study climatic, physiographic and biotic relationships.

A. & M. has the largest school of agriculture in the world. The school is a member of the Land Grant College System of the United States and its courses are accepted for credit by the outstanding educational institutions of the country.

This school permits a graduate student to take a total of six credits in a six weeks summer term. One three-credit graduate theory course and a special problem laboratory course of one to three credits will be taught by Dr. Chandler, making available full time graduate work in forest soils. Any student who has completed a three or four credit course in introductory soils at an accredited institution will be admitted to Dr. Chandler's courses.

For a six weeks summer term the matriculation fee is $15; the medical fee is $2; dormitory rent $8.50 including janitor service, and meals in the College dining hall are 40 cents a meal or 30 cents for the term of six weeks.
