leans. But the sea was in his blood and back again he went to it in 1933 as chef of the S. S. Delmundo plying between southern coastal cities, Rio De Janeiro, and Buenos Aires. He stayed with the sea then until he came to A. & M. in 1938 to take over the new mess hall the following year.

Not confining all his time to the maritime either, he is ranked as a specialist in the Louisiana National Guard in charge of food supply and direction of cooks for the 141st Field Artillery. He joined the national guard in 1933 and has been on the active list ever since.

His technique in the new mess hall has turned a bunch of boys who chronically complained about their food into a well fed happy corps. The soup we are getting now is perhaps the most healthful soup that is made. The soup is first cooked up in a bone marrow broth until the bones crumble; then many varieties of fresh vegetables are mixed in to give that wonderful tasting mixture that we all know. Those delicious brown gravies we go after are perhaps the most concentrated form of beef extract that is still good and eatable. This beef extract is mixed with fresh carrots, peas, and all sorts of vegetables that turn out a truly healthful flavoring.

The chef has created many dishes since he has been here in the mess hall. And he doesn't mind praising his help, calling the cooks, bus-boys, helpers, and others all his "boys". Nor does he mind making the corps wait a few minutes if the dish he is running out will be improved by serving it piping hot. So the next time you feel urged to complain about having to wait a minute, which is very seldom, just remember that Chef Flaune is probably doing you a favor.
