Hitch-Hiking—

short-cut. Seems kinda like being cheated out of your dessert after eating a thick steak... I just can't understand a thing like this."
He let us out a Milano Junction and then headed hell-bent for Waco. We both heaved a sigh of relief when he was gone, but it was several hours before we could get him out of our minds.
Well sir, our next ride came along quick enough—in a big truck so heavily loaded with bales of hay that it didn't seem possible for them all to stay on. As luck would have it, the driver had a girl with him so there was only room for one of us up front. Roommate and I matched to see who had to ride on top of the hay.
I lost!
Boy, was that ride cold! Good thing I don't have hay fever, too. The truck didn't go faster than 40 miles an hour, but the way the wind whistled by I figured we must have been going at least a hundred.

The driver took pity on me, though, and we stopped in Rockdale to get a cup of coffee.
It never occurred to me before then that truck drivers, too, might have their problems, but if you've ever talked with one any length of time, you're convinced already.
It seems that there's a state law about over-loading trucks.
"The trouble is," the driver told us while we were in the cafe, "it's impossible for a trucker to haul a paying load if he stays under the maximum weight allowed by law."

"As a result," he went on, "we have to take a chance with every load we carry, and we exceed the limit every time. When we get caught—and that's plenty often—we catch a fine which runs between $15 and $30. Oh well, it's a hell of a life anyway," he dismally concluded.
"Sure is," his girl agreed.
The trucker took us as far as Round Rock where he had some business to take care of, so we hit the pavement again. And believe-you-me, I was mighty glad to get off that double-high, triple-cold stack of hay!

Talk about going from one extreme to another, we did it.
Our next ride was in a new Buick. The driver, an employee of the Western Electric Co., was headed for San Antonio.
"My home is in Houston," he said, "but since the company has received so many national defense orders, I haven't spent one day in there."

We gathered from his conversation that his job was to install Western Electric's telephone equipment for Bell Telephone Co.
"The biggest worry in my life right now," he told us, "is the draft situation. It doesn't affect me directly because I'm past the maximum age limit, but so many of our men have been called that the rest of us have had to triple-up on our work."

"Not that we mind," he went on, "because the company is very good to us, but it seems to me that our men should be exempt from the draft. Surely it cannot be denied that communications are an important adjunct of national defense—but that's just my opinion of it," he concluded.
In less than half an hour we reached our destination—Austin—and bid goodbye to our last benefactor.
Within four hours we had made a hundred-mile trip, met seven widely different but interesting people, learned of the problems of three of them, learned their various prejudices and opinions concerning current events and affairs and received a near education the like of which we would never get in any classroom.

Introduced as the principal speaker, Col. Ike Ashburn paid tribute to the accomplishments and merit of Col. Beezley's term of office as head instructor in Field Artillery Military Science here.

"Col. Beezley and his fine family are leaving a very definite and equally fine imprint upon the life of this community and the officers and teachers of the college deplore his leaving."
"Speaking for these senior artillerymen and their younger brethren, Colonel, they pay you tonight man's finest tribute—that of great confidence, abiding respect and tender regard of a junior for a senior in a man's organization. This dinner has no synthetic sound-producing effects but evolves wholly from the minds and hearts of a fine group of young men who want to salute you, sir, wish you bon voyage, and who are grateful to you for your inspiring and understanding leadership."

Col. Beezley, who has been with the college since 1936, served in the World War in the Finance Department (QMC) as Financial Requisition officer of the A.E.F.
Before being transferred to Texas as A. & M. he commanded the Oklahoma district, C.C.C.

His new assignment will be acting colonel, Regimental Commander, 353rd F.A. Camp Livingstone, Louisiana's new organization being formed of colored selective service men.

Dr. George N. Shuster, president of Hunter college, believes Latin and Greek philosophy and religion must be restored to the American education scheme if young people are expected to defend democracy.

Field Artillerymen Give Banquet; Ashburn Is Principal Speaker

Farewell to Lieut. Col. O. E. Beezley was expressed Tuesday night by the entire senior class of the Field Artillery regiment at a special banquet in his honor.

As an added token of their appreciation, the Field Artillery men gave him a combination pipe holder and humidifier with two pipes.
