Reserve officers appointed from graduates of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps during 1941 may request deferment of extended active duty in the same manner as has heretofore been accorded Reserve officers on the eligible list in accordance with letter AG 210.31 O. R.C. (11-13-40) M. M. A. dated November 20, 1940. Corps Area Commanders will request Reserve Officers' Training Corps members of graduating classes to state whether there are any important reasons why they should not be ordered to extended active duty with the Regular Army upon acceptance of a commission as Reserve officer, in the event that such appointment is tendered to them, and also to state in the event that a request for deferment of service is made, the reasons for requesting deferment and the amount of delay considered necessary.

"2. They will be informed that in the event they are not granted deferment, it is contemplated that they will be ordered to twelve months' extended active duty either immediately upon graduation and acceptance of the Reserve Commission or within thirty to sixty days thereafter in the event such delay is requested. (Corps area commanders will be liberal in granting requests for deferment for the purpose of accepting positions with industries essential to the National Defense.) AG 210.31 ORC (1-2-41) R-A."

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has come across with their selections for best acting during 1940. Every magazine and critic picks his best performers and worst pictures, etc., but those of the Academy are regarded by the stars themselves as being the real thing. The Academy awards, enviously known as Oscars, are highly prized by the few able to win them. Their selections for last year were Ginger Rogers, Best Actress, for her part in "Kitty Foyle," and James Stewart, Best Actor, for "The Philadelphia Story."

Other awards went to John Ford for the year's best direction in "The Grapes of Wrath." David Selznick made the best production in "Rebecca." Walter Brennan for the third time got the award for the best supporting male role for work as Judge Bean in "The Westerner." The Academy award for character acting went to Jane Darwell for acting as Ma Joad in "The Grapes of Wrath."
