Dental Disease Causes 10 Per Cent Selectee Rejection

The high prevalence of faulty dental conditions among draftees when they report for physical examinations is cited by Dr. George W. Cox, State Health Officer, as emphasizing the need for early and regular dental care for children—both at home and under professional supervision.

Doctor Cox stated that dental disease has resulted in the rejection of as high as ten per cent of draftees for regular military service. He attributed these dental defects to the failure of the draftees to avail themselves of dental care—even when properly advised—during childhood. Another probable factor was the period of economic depression during which a great deal of needed preventive dental service was allowed to go unattended.

"When the majority of draftees were of elementary school age there was little or no development of the present-day dental schools health programs. These programs, still not as universal as they should be, aim at the double goal of educating the child from his family dentist or through school dental clinics. By the first of these two aims it is hoped that children will be led to continue regular dental care in their later years.

"Had the draftees received the initial care that results from this school program, the ill effects of the depression period would probably not have been so markedly reflected in the present day condition of their teeth. Every dental defect that results in the loss of a tooth had a small beginning. Had these and subsequent defects been noted early and corrected, the number of necessarily extracted teeth would not have been materially reduced, with, in turn, reduction of the number of draft rejections because of dental defects.

"There is no cure for dental decay, once it is started, other than prompt corrective service by a dentist. It is believed that the efforts now being made to accustom the children to early and regular dental care will prevent the development of conditions similar to those that are now influencing the rejection of our adult draftees. If it does this, it will also result in the improved health of our adult population whether or not a national emergency is faced.

"And good teeth in healthy bodies are as essential in normal as in emergency times."

Plans to Enlarge AL Fair Are Underway

The American Legion Fair Board and Brazos County Chamber of Commerce met last week to enlarge the heretofore show to be held at the Bryan American Legion Fair this fall to include nine counties, making it a district affair.

The purpose of this meeting was to enlarge the heretofore show thus making it coincide with the Mid-South Texas Heretofore Association, the organization that sponsored the heretofore auction sale here several months ago.

At this meeting the International Livestock Judging Team was invited to judge the livestock. The fair association and the chamber of commerce is also inviting the National Dairy Team to judge the dairy show and the National Collegiate Poultry Judging Team to judge the poultry show.

SERIOUS SENIOR SAYS:

"I am wearing a Uniform bought at the Uniform Tailor Shop . . . for longest wear and best appearance I recommend uniforms made by Mendl & Hornak . . . their uniforms give one a feeling of distinction."

A senior will impress on a Junior-to-be that selection of a uniform merits more than casual attention . . . it is one of the most important decisions a Cadet can make . . . but it is generally conceded that Sophomores who order uniforms made by Mendl & Hornak are sure that no other Cadet will have a uniform better than theirs.
